

Cambridge University Press

0521277868 - Illness and Culture in Contemporary Japan: An Anthropological View

Emiko Ohnuki-Tierney

Frontmatter

More information

Illness and culture in contemporary Japan

Cambridge University Press

0521277868 - Illness and Culture in Contemporary Japan: An Anthropological View

Emiko Ohnuki-Tierney

Frontmatter

More information

Illness and culture in contemporary Japan

An anthropological view

EMIKO OHNUKI-TIERNEY

Department of Anthropology

University of Wisconsin, Madison

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Cambridge University Press

0521277868 - Illness and Culture in Contemporary Japan: An Anthropological View

Emiko Ohnuki-Tierney

Frontmatter

More information

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

Cambridge, New York, Melbourne, Madrid, Cape Town, Singapore, São Paulo

Cambridge University Press

The Edinburgh Building, Cambridge CB2 2RU, UK

Published in the United States of America by Cambridge University Press, New York

www.cambridge.org

Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9780521259828

© Cambridge University Press 1984

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press.

First published 1984

Reprinted 1986, 1987, 1989, 1992, 1993, 1997, 1998, 2000

A catalogue record for this publication is available from the British Library

Library of Congress Cataloguing in Publication data

Ohnuki-Tierney, Emiko.

Illness and culture in contemporary Japan

Bibliography: p.

Includes index.

1. Medical anthropology – Japan. 2. Folk medicine – Japan. 3. Medicine care – Japan. 4. Japan – Social life and customs – 1945– . I. Title.

GN635.J2046 1984 362.1'0952 83–14415

ISBN-13 978-0-521-25982-8 hardback

ISBN-10 0-521-25982-7 hardback

ISBN-13 978-0-521-27786-0 paperback

ISBN-10 0-521-27786-8 paperback

Transferred to digital printing 2005

Cambridge University Press

0521277868 - Illness and Culture in Contemporary Japan: An Anthropological View

Emiko Ohnuki-Tierney

Frontmatter

More information

In loving memory of my father, Kōzaburō Ohnuki

Cambridge University Press

0521277868 - Illness and Culture in Contemporary Japan: An Anthropological View

Emiko Ohnuki-Tierney

Frontmatter

More information

Contents

List of illustrations	page x
Acknowledgments	xiii
1 Introduction	1
The basic approach of the book	3
Anthropological approaches to health care systems	4
Scope of the book	7
Fieldwork and methodology	10
Native anthropologists	13
Part I. Basic concepts and attitudes toward health and illness	19
2 Japanese germs	21
Daily hygiene in contemporary Japan	21
Illness etiology and the source of healing power	31
Purity and impurity in the contemporary Japanese world view and ethos	34
The early Japanese world view and ethos	35
The inside : outside opposition and the classification of people	39
Further interpretations	46
3 My very own illness: Illness in a dualistic world view	51
The concept of jibyō	51
Attitude toward death: Cancer and suicide	60
Discussion	67
4 Physiomorphism (somatization): An aspect of the Japanese illness etiology	75
Physiomorphism: Nonpsychological illness etiology	76

Cambridge University Press

0521277868 - Illness and Culture in Contemporary Japan: An Anthropological View

Emiko Ohnuki-Tierney

Frontmatter

More information

viii		Contents
	Lack of interest in psychotherapy	81
	Emphasis on physiological treatment	83
	Discussion	84
Part II. Medical pluralism		89
5	Kanpō: Traditional Japanese medicine of Chinese origin	91
	Theoretical foundations of kanpō: Comparison with biomedicine	92
	Increased recognition of kanpō	102
	The delivery of kanpō: Multiple levels	107
	Overview	121
6	Medical roles of Japanese religions: A descriptive overview	123
	Temples and shrines in contemporary urban Japan	124
	Ishikiri Shrine and its role in surgery	126
	Nakayama Temple: Its role in obstetrics, gynecology, and pediatrics	138
	Overview	143
7	Medical roles of Japanese religions: A historical-symbolic interpretation	145
	Background	145
	Occupational specializations of Japanese supernaturals	149
	Medical specializations of deities and buddhas in historical perspective	153
	Individual deities and buddhas with medical specializations	159
	Symbolic interpretation of medical specializations	164
8	Doctors and outpatients: Biomedicine (I)	167
	Health care delivery systems in contemporary Japan	167
	The medical profession: Past and present	169
	Visiting a doctor	175
	Pregnancy and childbirth	181
9	Hospitalization: Biomedicine (II)	189
	Introduction to a doctor	190
	Length of hospitalization	191
	The patient role	194
	Hospitalization as a “human drama”	208
	Discussion	210

Cambridge University Press

0521277868 - Illness and Culture in Contemporary Japan: An Anthropological View

Emiko Ohnuki-Tierney

Frontmatter

More information

Contents	ix
10 Medical pluralism	212
Biomedicine in culture and society	213
Medical pluralism: A descriptive summary	219
Summary	224
References	226
Index	239

List of illustrations

1	Genkan , the entranceway to a Japanese house where footgear must be taken off.	page 23
2	Advertisement display of tombstones for aborted fetuses with jizō buddha, wearing a red bib, flowers, and small pinwheels.	79
3	In the moxibustion treatment, cones of dried young mugwort leaves are burned on the body.	98
4	Three types of acupuncture needles.	99
5	A nurse at a kanpō clinic determines the pressure points for moxibustion treatment. Background pictures show the pressure points and meridians.	109
6	A paramedic determines pressure points and inserts acupuncture needles 4 to 8 cm long.	115
7	An invention by a paramedic. Next to an inserted needle is placed a beer-bottle cap, with a raised metal mesh inside. Lighted incense is placed on the metal mesh so that heat from the incense penetrates the body via the needle.	116
8	A questionnaire to be filled out at drugstores in order for a pharmacist to choose an appropriate kanpō medicine.	119
9	Roadside healer.	130
10	Shrine for treatment of ringing ears and excessive discharge of ear wax.	131
11	Prayer boards at a shrine for ringing ears and ear wax.	132
12	Prayer pebbles at a shrine for ringing ears and ear wax.	132
13	Large stone edifices indicating the amount of donations by a kanpō dealer to various civic causes. The business has been closely associated with the Ishikiri Shrine.	133
14	Roadside shrine near the Ishikiri Shrine.	133
15	Advertisement by a diviner offering to make “decisive decisions” on various matters in life, such as marriage,

Cambridge University Press

0521277868 - Illness and Culture in Contemporary Japan: An Anthropological View

Emiko Ohnuki-Tierney

Frontmatter

More information

Illustrations	xi
entrance examinations, runaways from home, illness, business, and lawsuits.	134
16 Roadside diviner.	135
17 Votive plaques for aborted fetuses, asking for forgiveness or praying for their peaceful sleep.	140
18 Large incense burner at Nakayama Temple. People “scoop up” the smoke from the lighted incense with their hands and place it on an ailing part of the body.	140
19 At Nakayama Temple, visitors write prayers and their names and addresses on bibs and hang them on stakes placed around the buddha.	141
20 Many visitors to Nakayama Temple are women with infants. In the background are numerous omikuji (fortune papers), which visitors buy at the temple and tie to the wooden structure for their good fortune to come true.	142
21 An obstetrician at a biomedical hospital writing a red character for celebration on the pregnancy sashes of his patients.	182

Cambridge University Press

0521277868 - Illness and Culture in Contemporary Japan: An Anthropological View

Emiko Ohnuki-Tierney

Frontmatter

More information

Acknowledgments

This is the first step in my odyssey back to my own culture. In so many ways, my life in the United States has been like living on a tightrope. My miraculous deliverance from major falls is due to many individuals, both in and out of academe, who have extended their understanding and generosity. It would be difficult to acknowledge even those who contributed directly to this book, not to mention the others.

The fieldwork for this project, both in 1979 and 1980, was supported by a grant from the Japan Foundation, for which I am most grateful. My trip back to Japan in 1980 as well as my fieldwork among the Japanese in Madison in 1980 were supported by the Research Committee, University of Wisconsin Graduate School. Their funding and encouragement have been a source of strength in my research since I started my career at the University of Wisconsin.

Countless Japanese have contributed to this work. Although I cannot name my individual informants, in order to protect their privacy, I am most indebted to them. My special thanks go to Drs. I and S, as I refer to them in my book, who let me observe their clinical practice for an extended period of time. During both 1979 and 1980, the National Museum of Ethnology in Osaka extended its hospitality and supplied me with an office and access to various facilities. Most of all, I cherish the staff's generosity and willingness to share insights and discuss Japanese culture. In particular I extend my appreciation to Professor Tadao Umesao, director of the museum. Despite the heavy demands on his time, he generously offered me his keen observations of Japanese and Western cultures. Professor Mikiharu Itoh shared his lifelong work on Japanese religions with me and made my stay most enjoyable by extending gracious hospitality.

If I must choose one individual most responsible for preventing me from vanishing from the field of anthropology, it is Professor Jan Vansina of the University of Wisconsin, Madison. He first knew me as a foreign student, ignorant both of anthropology and the culture of the American graduate school. He has kindly read all my writings and continuously encouraged me in my slow and feeble endeavor in anthropology. He also read the manuscript for this book

Cambridge University Press

0521277868 - Illness and Culture in Contemporary Japan: An Anthropological View

Emiko Ohnuki-Tierney

Frontmatter

More information

xiv

Acknowledgments

and gave valuable criticisms and suggestions. Over the years, he has offered me original theoretical insights that have enriched my anthropology enormously. Words cannot express my gratitude.

Some years ago, I had kaiun (good luck) in meeting Professor Robert J. Smith of Cornell University, a most respected genrō (master) in Japanese anthropology. Since then he has generously helped me in countless ways. Professor David Plath of the University of Illinois read a draft of this book and offered detailed criticisms and suggestions. I asked his assistance not only because of his intimate knowledge of Japanese culture, but also because he worked in the same region of Japan where I did my fieldwork. Professor Roger Sanjek of the City University of New York also read a draft of this book with meticulous attention and then offered me generous support as well as constructive criticisms and suggestions. To all those who suffered through the reading of the manuscript at one stage or another, I am most appreciative. Their criticisms and suggestions have improved the final version of this book enormously. I remain responsible for its shortcomings.

Shortly before I received the contract for this book, my father passed away. He was an unusual father who wrote to me every single day for four years during college and for several more years during my stay in the United States, and less frequently after he realized I intended to stay in the United States. Although I was too busy with my life fully to appreciate his effort, I have no doubt in my mind that it was his love that kept me innocent of the negative side of life and that kept me going without fear and discouragement. A book is indeed a poor substitute for the personal care I could not give him in his final years. Nevertheless, I dedicate this book to his memory. My appreciation is no less to my mother, whose love and concern are always shown in the most helpful ways. My husband Tim, with his enormous sense of integrity and tolerance, has kept our home a peaceful place in which to engage in my obsession with anthropology. Our sons Alan and Roderic and their cheerful outlook on life have been a major source of strength to me; without their bright eyes and smiles, life would not be this beautiful.

E. O-T

Madison, Wisconsin