

Contents

Chronology	page	ix
Why the Republic?		1
A historical and political struggle		1
The image and memory of the Revolution. The role of historians and of history. The decline of the dynasties.
A society in crisis		6
The problem of the workers. The problem of the peasants.
Romanticism and the education of the people		9
Romanticism and populism. The discovery of France. Uncertainty and confusions. Widespread support for the idea of democracy, however.
A 'republican party'		14
The deputies. The newspapers. The associations. How was influence exerted? Workers and republicans.
The trial and failure of a kind of socialism (24 February–4 May 1848)		22
The change of regime		23
The February days. The formation of the provisional government. A Republic with a human face. The reception in the provinces. Political acceptability? Social difficulties? Problems of interpretation. The rallying of Algiers and its prospects.
The provisional government in action		32
Diverse tendencies in the provisional government. Lamartine, peace and the flag. The great economic decisions. The national workshops. The question of socialism. The great political decisions. Liberty and equality. Free Paris. The clubs. The reappearance of the class struggle. Blanqui. The problem of the armed forces. The March days. The problem of the elections. 16 April. The provinces under the commissioners for the Republic. Social tensions in the provinces.

vi	Contents
	The beginnings of conflict	45
	The election of the Constituent Assembly. The first bloodshed (Rouen). 4 May, the Republic's official birth.
3	The re-establishment of order (May 1848–June 1849)	49
	The Executive Commission (5 May–24 June 1848)	49
	The Executive Commission and the new ministry. 15 May and its problems. Public opinion at the beginning of June. Polarisation. The new-comers. A new climate, a new problem. The railways. The end of the workshops and the explosion of the working-class revolt. Public opinion and the June days. Cavaignac replaces the Five.
	The Cavaignac government (24 June–20 December 1848)	60
	The crushing of the revolt. Cavaignac and the Republic. The Constituent Assembly and reaction. Proudhon and socialism. Democracy lives on. The awakening of the provinces. The Constitution. A philosophical problem. A political problem. The presidential election. The candidates. The results.
	The beginning of the presidency of Louis-Napoleon Bonaparte (20 December 1848–13 June 1849)	73
	The oath. The new political trend. Resistance and the end of the Constituent Assembly. The legislative election of 13 May: the parties involved. Results. The revelation of rural socialism. The Rome expedition. 13 June 1849. A limited failure.
4	France faced with the great alternative: order or social democracy	81
	Economic conditions in 1849–50	82
	A limited improvement. A capitalism without leaders and without confidence. The agricultural depression.
	The 'Mountain'	85
	Its strategy. The Mountain's newspapers and men. Means of action and organisation. Political and daily life in red territories. The association as both a practical vehicle and a moral ideal. A combination of democracy and socialism.
	The 'party of order'	94
	The age-old vigour of the anti-republican polemic. The horror story of social fear. A time of great misunderstandings. Order. Associations/conspiracies. Property. The family. Violence, the guillotine and the slaughterhouse. Red phobia. Religion. Means of action. Propaganda. Pamphlets. Containment, above all.
	Regional variations	105
	The montagnard provinces. The conservative provinces. Separate provincial moods or a unified national one? Algerian 'France'. The Antilles. Paris, the centre of fashionable society. The Elysée. Paris, the intellectual centre. Political circles. Paris, the people's centre. The workers' movement still active.

Contents	vii
Between the conservative order and the Bonapartist order (June 1849–November 1851)	117
Bonaparte and the bourgeois. 1: an antithesis	117
Bonaparte and the bourgeois. 2: equivocations	118
The effects of joint repression	119
Repression. The first signs of disagreement. The Falloux law. The effects of the Falloux law.
The political turning-point of the year 1850	124
The by-elections and the law of 31 May. The left is driven back to conspiracy. The Elysée embarks upon its campaign. The failure of dynastic fusion and the conservative split.
The rise of Bonapartism	130
The army and the Changarnier affair. Disarray in the Assembly. Failure for revision. Important political manoeuvres. the quaesors' proposition.
Bonaparte's coup d'Etat and the republican resistance (2–10 December 1851)	138
The 'coup d'Etat' in Paris	138
The proclamations. The arrests. The resistance of the Assembly. Popular resistance. Resistance is crushed.
Resistance in the provinces	149
General causes. The factors of failure and success. Chronology. The first days. Central and south-western France. Chronology (continued). The movement faces set-backs in some places, gains ground in others. The south-east. The insurrection, seen generally, as a political and military event. The columns. The insurrection: sporadic economic and social factors.
Interpretations and consequences	160
Jacquerie . The importance of the thesis of jacquerie . The immediate political consequences. The theory of a struggle for right. Sociological considerations. Ideological considerations.
From the coup d'Etat to the Empire (December 1851–December 1852)	166
The anti-republican repression	166
The principles upon which the repression was based. The mixed commissions. The legal repression. The banishment of the representatives. Cases of conscience. The secession of intelligence.
The institutions	172
The first plebiscite. The maintenance of universal suffrage. Reactionary constitutional moves. Other methods employed by the dictatorship. The 1852 elections. The role of the Church. What kind of social support was considered desirable?

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-28988-7 - The Republican Experiment, 1848-1852

Maurice Agulhon

Table of Contents

More information

viii	Contents
	The great economic initiatives	178
	Social policy. The affair of the Orléans fortune. Industrial expansion. The new capitalism. Agricultural policies.
	The return to imperial monarchy	183
	The session of the Legislative Body. The tour of Provence. The speech in Bordeaux. The restoration of the Empire.
	Conclusion	187
	The Republic of the 'forty-eighters'	188
	The official Republic	191
	The Bonapartist dictatorship	192
	Appendix: Statistics of the repression of the insurrection of December 1851	196
	Notes	199
	Bibliography	204
	Index of names	209