

Contents

Preface	page ix
1 Introduction: the dimensions of the problem	1
The student brain drain and the new migration	2
Israel and international student exchange	4
Basic sociological problems associated with the brain drain	8
2 Coming to America	10
Prior research concerning motives for study abroad: who studies abroad and why do they go?	11
The empirical study of reasons	12
Organization of Israeli education and its impact on students' reasons for going abroad	16
Some nonacademic reasons for study abroad	27
Summary	29
3 Education and economic opportunity	30
Intention and behavior: validating the indicator	31
An estimate of the magnitude of the Israeli student brain drain	34
Differential migration as a function of educational achievement	41
Path model for analyzing Israeli student migration intentions	52
Summary	68
4 Public policy and student migration	69
The instruments of American policy	74
Administering the exchange visitor's program	78
Israel's policy alternatives	83
Summary	88
	vii

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-29192-7 - Education, Employment, and Migration: Israel in Comparative Perspective

Paul Ritterband

Table of Contents

More information

viii	Contents
5	Some cross-national comparisons	90
	Foreign students in the United States and France	91
	Foreign graduate students in the United States	99
	Summary	108
6	The social utility of study abroad	109
	Evaluating costs and benefits of the brain drain	117
	Summary	122
	Epilogue	124
	Recent trends in Israeli student migration	124
	Occupational opportunity and repatriation	126
	Appendix: population and instrument	129
	Notes	131
	Index	141