Acknowledgements

Grateful thanks are due in the first instance to Diane Speakman who nursed this volume of essays through its early stages, and to her successor at the Cambridge University Press, Sarah Stanton. The much-appreciated work and advice of Jane Van Tassel also deserve mention. Jacqueline Kavanagh and her staff at the BBC Written Archives Centre in Caversham were a source both of help and encouragement, particularly in connection with permission to reproduce unpublished BBC copyright material. Thanks are also due to the staffs of the BBC Sound Archives, the BBC Script Library, and the BBC Reference Library, and especially to Michel Petheram for his valuable help and advice in compiling the bibliography of published playscripts. The staff of the Library at the University of Stirling were extremely helpful, as always. Finally, acknowledgement must be made of the collective typing skills of Katherine McKenzie, Olwen Peel, and Mamie Prentice, of the Department of English Studies at the University of Stirling.
