Themes in the Social Sciences

Editors: Jack Goody and Geoffrey Hawthorn

The purpose of this series is to publish discussions of general interest to anthropologists, demographers and sociologists, and to those economists, historians and students of politics who are concerned with issues that extend beyond the conventional limits of their disciplines. The books will be both theoretical and empirical, and often comparative. They will deal with non-industrial and industrial societies, and with those in transition. They will not necessarily be introductions to their subjects, but should appeal to more advanced undergraduates as well as to graduate students and teachers.

Other books in the series

Edmund Leach: Culture and communication: the logic by which symbols are connected. An introduction to the use of structuralist analysis in social anthropology

Anthony Heath: Rational choice and social exchange: a critique of exchange theory

Philip Abrams and Andrew McCulloch: Communes, sociology and society

Jack Goody: The domestication of the savage mind
