The African Studies Series is a collection of monographs and general studies which reflect the interdisciplinary interests of the African Studies Centre at Cambridge. Volumes to date have combined historical, anthropological, economic, political and other perspectives. Each contribution has assumed that such broad approaches can contribute much to our understanding of Africa, and that this may in turn be of advantage to specific disciplines.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The trail of indebtedness which I have left behind in the writing of this book has been enormous, and to thank all those who have had a part in its making would require a substantial work in itself. I wish, however, to acknowledge those without whose guidance and encouragement this task would have never been completed. My deepest thanks to the Foreign Area Fellowship Program and its members for their generous support of the research resulting in this volume. I am also indebted to the Indiana University Foundation for its loan of crucial field recording equipment. Of those persons who have helped in so many ways special acknowledgements are due Mr William B. Fagg, Keeper of Ethnography, the British Museum; Mr Richard B. Nunoo, Director of the National Museum of Ghana; and Dr A. A. Y. Kyerematen, former Director of the Ghana National Cultural Centre. The faculty and staff of the Institute of African Studies at the University of Ghana kindly extended to me every courtesy and their total assistance while I was in residence there. Professors Jack Goody and Ivor Wilks were particularly instrumental in guiding me along certain lines of inquiry which ultimately resulted in this publication. My sincerest appreciation goes to Bradford G. Martin for encouraging me to delve further into Islamic sources and for his counsel. I would also like to cite my colleagues Simon Ottenberg and Pierre van de Berghe, who kindly discussed various segments of this manuscript with me. Ultimately I would like to acknowledge an enormous intellectual and emotional debt to Roy Sieber, who kindled my interest in the arts of Africa and who directed me towards this particular theme.

Field research would not have been possible without supremely able interpreters: Kofi Ofori Ansong, Moro Bamba, and particularly Peter Kwesi Pipim. My deepest thanks, however, are reserved for the numerous informants in west central Ghana and the northeastern Ivory Coast who freely and openly shared their minds and hearts with me.

Many thanks are also due numerous persons who helped in the actual compilation of this manuscript. I am especially indebted to Eleanor Howard for her rigorous editorial assistance and for her careful preparation of the final draft of this work.

Finally I wish to express my deepest gratitude to my wife, Stevie, who shared in more ways than she will ever know in making this book a reality.
