

Contents

|                                                                                            |         |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Acknowledgments                                                                            | page ix |
| Introduction. The Janus-Face of Romanticism and Modernism                                  | i       |
| 1. Robert Frost and John Crowe Ransom: Diptych of Ironists, the Woodsman and the Chevalier | 8       |
| 2. Wallace Stevens: World as Mundo , Mundo as World                          | 49      |
| 3. T. S. Eliot: The Lady Between the Yew Trees                                             | 91      |
| 4. Ezra Pound: Between Kung and Eleusis                                                    | 169     |
| 5. H. D.: Helen in Bethlehem, Hilda in Egypt                                               | 253     |
| 6. William Carlos Williams: Mother-Son and Paterson                                        | 321     |
| 7. Allen Tate and Hart Crane: Diptych with Angels and Demons                               | 373     |
| Coda. Yvor Winters and Robinson Jeffers: The Janus-Face of Anti-Modernism                  | 423     |
| Notes                                                                                      | 447     |
| Index                                                                                      | 471     |