Acknowledgements

This book is based upon a doctoral thesis written for the London School of Oriental and African Studies between 1974 and 1977. In revising the original text I have tried to bring the work up to date with reference to more recent publications. The demands of my present occupation as a full-time staff member of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees have made the process rather protracted.

In the course of writing the original thesis, I received much invaluable assistance and advice. The School of Oriental and African Studies made the research possible with the award of a Post-graduate Exhibition. Dr M. T. Darwish and Dr S. Khulusi kindly offered their help on textual matters and the manuscript was typed with care by Mr V. Daykin. Many an insight was due to the critical sense of Mr M. B. El-Komos and I am grateful to Mr A. D. Chappa for his unfailing help. In revising the original text for publication I also took account of the useful critical comments made by my external examiner, Dr K. Abu Deeb.

Revising the text would not have been possible without the patience and encouragement of my wife who bore with me during the many evenings and weekends I spent tied to my desk. The work pressure was alleviated somewhat by my supervisor at the UN, Mr K. Lyonette, who generously agreed to grant me one month's special leave. Mr M. Abou Roub helped me with several joint readings of the Arabic texts, and I greatly benefited from Dr N. Calder's advice on the translation of some particularly obscure passages. Ms M. Russel kindly agreed to do some of the typing in Geneva and the final manuscript was once again expertly compiled by Mr V. Daykin. Many thanks go to the Cambridge University Press for patiently waiting for the manuscript and agreeing to publish the text.

I am particularly grateful to my father who awakened my interest in literature from a very early age, and to my former supervisor at the School of Oriental and African Studies, Dr J. Wansbrough.
