

---

---

Contents

List of illustrations	page	vii
Acknowledgments		viii
Introduction		i
1	Sensibility and slavery: the discourse of working-women's verse	11
	Textuality and subjectivity: the politics of unlettered female genius	11
	The unhappy alliance of Ann Yearsley and Hannah More: a parable for feminism	16
	Pastoral and georgic transformations	22
	Disputing the rule of the fathers	29
	Versifying the Scriptures	35
	That ravishing supplement	43
2	The resignation of Mary Collier: some problems in feminist literary history	56
	Reading The Woman's Labour	59
	Patronage and conservatism	69
3	An English Sappho brilliant, young and dead? Mary Leapor laughs at the fathers	78
	The "sapphic" muse	83
	Patronage and patronizing relations	99
	Reading Crumble-Hall	107
4	The complex contradictions of Ann Yearsley: working-class writer, bourgeois subject?	120
	The "savage" muse	125
	The pleasures of the text – with a vengeance	152
	Domesticating the political and the politics of domesticity	165
		v

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-37412-5 - The Muses of Resistance: Laboring-Class Women's Poetry in Britain, 1739–1796

Donna Landry

Table of Contents

More information

vi	Contents
5	Laboring in pastures new: the two Elizabeths	186
	Elizabeth Hands on the pastoral	186
	Elizabeth Bentley, the “Norwich maiden”	209
6	Other others: the marginality of cultural difference	217
	Janet Little breaks into Scots	220
	Slavery and sensibility: Phillis Wheatley within the fracture	237
7	The 1790s and after: revolutions that as yet have no model	254
	“Revolutionary women” in Britain as impure contradictions	254
	Mary Wollstonecraft and Hannah More reconsidered	257
	Feminist and democratic ideology at the limit	260
	The Turkish prejudice	267
	A shifting limit: Wollstonecraft’s The Wrongs of Woman: Or, Maria. A Fragment	268
	After 1800: from class combativeness to the dejection of Ann Candler and the conservatism of Elizabeth Bentley	273
	Notes	281
	Index	317

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-37412-5 - The Muses of Resistance: Laboring-Class Women's Poetry in Britain, 1739–1796

Donna Landry

Table of Contents

More information

---

---

Illustrations

A cottage girl shelling pease (courtesy of Huntington Library)	frontispiece
Ann Yearsley (courtesy of British Library)	page 121
British Liberty (courtesy of British Library)	174