From the publication of the first volumes in 1984 the General Editor of the New Cambridge Shakespeare was Philip Brockbank and the Associate General Editors were Brian Gibbons and Robin Hood. From 1990 to 1994 the General Editor was Brian Gibbons and the Associate General Editors were A. R. Braunmuller and Robin Hood.

THE SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI

Shakespeare’s plays about the reign of Henry VI, written at the beginning of his career, were for a long time undervalued. This was because of doubts about their authorship and because of the difficulties of determining their theatrical provenance. Recently, however, a series of outstanding productions by the RSC and other companies has demonstrated their theatrical vitality, their conventions have been better understood in the light of new critical methods, and their innovative and sceptical questioning of Elizabethan orthodoxies has been understood in the light of revisionist readings of the history of Shakespeare’s own times. The Wars of the Roses haunted the Elizabethans, as is shown by the number of authors who wrote about them. Shakespeare’s account was the most ambitious, the most dramatically innovative, and politically the most radical.

This is the first major edition for over thirty years of The Second Part of King Henry VI. It takes account of recent discoveries concerning Shakespeare’s early career, and pays particular attention to recent theatrical history, relating readings generated by modern performances to new ideologically positioned accounts of the history and politics of Shakespeare’s age. Part 2 offers a searing account of aristocratic sedition and a portrait of a relationship between the King and his Protector, Good Duke Humphrey, which is as complex as that between Prince Hal and his father Bullingbrook. It concerns itself with the nature of history, the role of conscience, and the relation between law and equity. It also contains a complex reading of the kind of event the the Tudor régime had cause to fear, a popular uprising, led in this instance by Jack Cade.

THE NEW CAMBRIDGE SHAKESPEARE

The New Cambridge Shakespeare succeeds The New Shakespeare which began publication in 1921 under the general editorship of Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch and John Dover Wilson, and was completed in the 1960s, with the assistance of G. I. Duthie, Alice Walker, Peter Ure and J. C. Maxwell. The New Shakespeare itself followed upon The Cambridge Shakespeare, 1863–6, edited by W. G. Clark, J. Glover and W. A. Wright.

The New Shakespeare won high esteem both for its scholarship and for its design, but shifts of critical taste and insight, recent Shakespearean research, and a changing sense of what is important in our understanding of the plays, have made it necessary to re-edit and redesign, not merely to revise, the series.

The New Cambridge Shakespeare aims to be of value to a new generation of playgoers and readers who wish to enjoy fuller access to Shakespeare’s poetic and dramatic art. While offering ample academic guidance, it reflects current critical interests and is more attentive than some earlier editions have been to the realisation of the plays on the stage, and to their social and cultural settings. The text of each play has been freshly edited, with textual data made available to those users who wish to know why and how one published text differs from another. Although modernised, the edition conserves forms that appear to be expressive and characteristically Shakespearean, and it does not attempt to disguise the fact that the plays were written in a language other than that of our own time.

Illustrations are usually integrated into the critical and historical discussion of the play and include some reconstructions of early performances by C. Walter Hodges. Some editors have also made use of the advice and experience of Maurice Daniels, for many years a member of the Royal Shakespeare Company.

Each volume is addressed to the needs and problems of a particular text, and each therefore differs in style and emphasis from others in the series.

PREFACE

Henry VI Part 2 is, without doubt, a major play. It addresses some of the major concerns of Julius Caesar, having at its centre the murder of a national leader. It probes a relationship between the young king and his Protector Gloucester that is as complex as that between Prince Hal and Henry IV. It contains a portrayal of a major rebellion which I have tried to re-examine in the light of new social history and cultural theory.

It is in the theatre, however, that the value and dramatic potential of this and the other Henry VI texts have been truly demonstrated. In the decades since the last major editions, those of John Dover Wilson (The New Shakespeare, 1952) and Andrew S. Cairncross (New Arden, 1957), Stratford and London have seen major productions of versions of this history cycle (1964 and 1977), a shortened version went on a national tour (1987–8), and a shortened version appeared at Stratford in late 1988. Reviews of those productions have turned into some of the most perceptive critical appraisals of these plays.

The editions of Wilson and Cairncross, along with that of Norman Sanders (New Penguin, 1981), created major advances in our knowledge of these texts. To these editors I owe a debt for their major work on the lexical problems of the text, although I have been surprised how much there was still to do. Cairncross’s edition offered challenging but unendorsable views on the history of the text. The Oxford edition of The Complete Works (1986), wherein 2 Henry VI (known there as The First Part of the Contention) was prepared by William Montgomery and Gary Taylor, along with the apparatus in William Shakespeare: A Textual Companion (1987), appeared after my own work was well advanced. The work of these editors has been perpetually stimulating and often provocative. My own edition, however, will be found to be far less interventionist than theirs. I had prepared a draft of this edition and of that of 3 Henry VI before turning to my final work on 1 Henry VI.

Working on the plays in this order persuaded me that critical arguments exist in plenty for the case that Shakespeare wrote his plays in the order of history, arguments that have not been taken sufficient note of by those scholars who have approached the problems of authorship and composition from textual propositions alone.

To the late Philip Brockbank I am grateful for much encouragement and the loan of his PhD thesis, which not only records pioneering work on the sources of the sequence but which generated a series of articles that were really the first to treat the plays as a major achievement. These stood virtually alone and certainly unchallenged for a critical generation. My own work confirms Brockbank’s pioneering but not yet accepted contention that Shakespeare drew far more from Holinshed than from Hall. Marilynne Robinson also loaned me her PhD thesis, ix which, in its handling of the sources of the play and careful intelligent probing of the subtext of the relationship between Henry and Gloucester, is the fruit of labours important as those of Brockbank; I am ashamed to admit how long I had it. Michael Freeman, Leonard Goldstein, Ronald Knowles, William Montgomery, and Eric Rasmussen all generously offered me the fruits of research before publication.

Librarians at the Universities of Kent, Sheffield, Texas, and at the British and London Libraries have been consistently helpful; so have the staff of the Oxford Text Archive who provided me with electronic copies of the Folio and Quarto texts which were an invaluable aid in checking the text I had established. Mary White and Sylvia Morris at the Shakespeare Centre Library in Stratford could not have been more helpful in guiding me through their archives and, in particular, helping me with the choice of illustrations. To colleagues at Kent and Sheffield I am grateful for sabbatical leaves which hastened the advancement of this work. Dr Pamela Mason disagreed constructively with me over the productions we had seen, and Professor Dominique Goy-Blanquet argued the toss over the meaning of the play and directed me to useful French material. Professor Brian Gibbons, my general editor, was perceptive, courteous – both when critical and encouraging – and unfailingly prompt to respond to what I sent him. Professor Patrick Collinson introduced me to the new wave of political, religious, and social historians of the period. My colleague, Professor Norman Blake, demonstrated by his painstaking scrutiny of my manuscript that divisions between Departments of Literature and Language are more imagined than real. Thanks to Sarah Stanton of Cambridge University Press for her patience and sage suggestions. C. Walter Hodges’ drawings served, as always, to stimulate and not just to illustrate.

ABBREVIATIONS AND CONVENTIONS

Shakespeare’s plays, when cited in this edition, are abbreviated in a style modified slightly from that used in the Harvard Concordance to Shakespeare. Other editions of Shakespeare are abbreviated under the editor’s surname (Cairncross, Dyce) unless they are the work of more than one editor. In such cases, an abbreviated series name is used (Cam., Johnson Var.) When more than one edition by the same editor is cited, later editions are discriminated with a raised figure (Collier²). All quotations from Shakespeare, except those from 1–3 Henry VI, use the lineation of The Riverside Shakespeare, under the textual editorship of G. Blakemore Evans.
