

Contents

Acknowledgements and note	page vii
Chronology	ix
Introduction	1
1 Scott's changing world and the making of Waverley	5
1 The Napoleonic years	5
2 The Age of History and the Scottish Enlightenment	8
3 Changing Scotland	14
4 'These giddy-paced times' and the Age of the Museum	22
5 Changing Scott	26
6 Scott, the great coaginator	30
2 Waverley as story	36
7 New journeys, new plot	36
8 New encounters, new cast	45
9 The hero as intermediary	49
10 Previous fiction of the Forty-five	55
11 Between highland and lowland, stasis and change	57
12 Between prejudice and cultural tolerance	62
13 Between rebellion and civil order, nationhood and Union	66
14 Between romance and realism	70
3 Waverley as history	74
15 Historical fiction and history as temporal structures	74

vi Contents

16	The Forty-five: a modern history	77
17	The silences of Waverley	80
18	The turn from 'drum and trumpet' history	82
19	The civilian on the battlefield	85
20	The eclipse of epic and ballad	87
21	Historical romance: a new use of the past	89
22	Metahistory: the historians in the historical novel	91
4	Waverley as initiator	95
23	The novelty of Scott's historical novel	95
24	Waverley and the Waverley Novels	97
25	The influence on the early European historical novel	99
26	The influence on European realism	103
27	The influence on nineteenth-century historiography	106
28	Waverley as bestseller	107
5	Conclusions	111
29	A fourfold landmark of world literature	111
30	Scott, the verbal museum and us	112
	Appendix	116
	Guide to further reading	120