The Rose Monograph Series was established in 1968 in honor of the distinguished sociologists Arnold and Caroline Rose, whose bequest makes the series possible. The sole criterion for publication in the series is that a manuscript contribute to knowledge in the discipline of sociology in a systematic and substantial manner. All areas of the discipline and all established and promising modes of inquiry are equally eligible for consideration. The Rose Monograph Series is an official publication of the American Sociological Association.

Acknowledgments

This book was born out of curiosity about how workplaces might be organized without a hierarchy of bosses and workers. But as anyone who has written a book knows, it is a long journey from creative inspiration to final book manuscript. This book represents many years of research, of interpreting and making sense of research observations, of distilling the work of others, and of rethinking and revising conclusions. Many people have contributed to its development along the way.

Long before this project was undertaken, numerous people contributed to our thinking about it. The seeds that later led to a professional interest in democracy were probably planted by Sam and Evelyn Rothschild, who understood the value of a democratic household and self-initiated action. Fellow graduate students at the University of California, Santa Barbara, now sociologists all around the country, provided an abundance of moral support and an ever-present sounding board for ideas not yet polished. Especially to be thanked are Laura Nathan, Tom Koenig, Brad Smith, Rosemary Taylor, and Robert Wolf. This analysis of democratic organizations began as dissertation research and we are grateful to the Department of Sociology at Santa Barbara for providing the kind of intellectually stimulating milieu in which students may learn how to formulate their own questions. Debts are owed especially to Professors Richard Flacks, Bettina Huber, Richard Appelbaum, and Harvey Molotch. Together they combined enthusiasm with considered criticism, and they coupled their high expectations of scholarship with personal autonomy.

In the course of working on this book we have benefited from the ideas of many other people who have given serious attention to the prospects for non-hierarchical forms of organization: Howard Aldrich, Paul Bernstein, Joseph Blasi, Henry Etzkowitz, Art Hochner, Rosabeth Kanter, Frank Lindenfeld, Ray Loveridge, Jane Mansbridge, Patricia Martin, Carole Pateman, Charles Perrow, Corey Rosen, Raymond Russell, Ann Swidler, and William Foote Whyte come especially to mind. Each of these people read one part or another of our manuscript, offered scholarly criticism and innumerable references, and brought a valued sense of professional camaraderie.

A number of institutions provided the time and financial support to pursue different aspects of the work reported in this book: The New Systems of Work and Participation Program at Cornell University's School of Industrial and Labor Relations, supported by funds from the National Institute of Mental Health, and the Program on Non-Profit Organizations at Yale University's Institution for Social and Policy Studies.

This book benefited as well from the rigorous review of Ernest Q. Campbell and the anonymous reviewers he enlisted to review it for the Arnold and Caroline Rose Monograph Series, sponsored by the American Sociological Association.

Finally, this research could literally not have been done were it not for the openness of the participants in the alternative organizations studied. Because the names used in this study are fictitious, they cannot be mentioned by name here, but we sincerely wish to thank them for generously giving of themselves and their time. We hope that this work justifies their many confidences.

Remaining errors are quite obviously our own doing.
