Acknowledgments

To the many who have personally aided my research and writing over the past eight years, I extend my thanks. Above all, I am indebted to Steven Ozment, who patiently directed an earlier version of the project as my dissertation advisor at Yale University, and who has since continued to support and encourage my efforts. I owe much to him. For guidance and inspiration at various times, I would like to thank Natalie Zemon Davis, William Monter, Robert Kingdon, Carl Christensen, and, in a special way, John Tedeschi. I am also indebted to the two anonymous readers for Cambridge University Press, whose perceptive comments and suggestions helped make this a better work in many ways. Peter Brown, who would be surprised to know that he unintentionally suggested the project when he came to speak about the sacred in late antiquity one April afternoon in New Haven, also deserves to be thanked. The monks of St. John's Abbey and University in Collegeville, Minnesota, where I taught for two years, were most supportive of my work, and this book, in no small way, is a tribute to their ecumenical spirit. Here at the University of Virginia, I have profited greatly from the wisdom of H. C. Erik Midelfort, as well as from the advice and encouragement of other colleagues who suggested improvements and urged me to press on, especially Martin Jaffee, James Childress, David Little, and Gerald Fogarty. Friends and associates who provided less tangible, but no less significant support, are Susan Snyder, Jure Kristo, James Latimer, Elizabeth Carroll-Horrocks, Arnold Snyder, and Thomas Safley. Gail Moore and Daniel Smith, who "keyboarded" the manuscript on a word processor, also deserve credit for making this possible. Finally, in a most special way, I want to thank Jane Ulrich, my wife, for making it all worthwhile.

The following have funded this project and helped make my research possible: The Center for Renaissance Studies at the Newberry Library in Chicago, with Fellowships from the National Endowment for the Humanities (1980) and the Exxon Educational Foundation (1982); the University of Virginia, with a Faculty Summer Research Grant (1983); The Center for Reformation Research in St. Louis, with a Junior Fellowship; and the Council on West European Studies at Yale, with a research grant.

Portions of this book have previously appeared, in much different form, as articles. A greatly condensed version of the conclusions reached in Chapter 4 received the Carl Meyer Memorial Prize at the Sixteenth Century Studies Conference in St. Louis in 1980, and recently appeared, in a further revised form, in the Journal of the Rocky Mountain Medieval and Renaissance Association (1983), under the title "Iconoclasm as a Revolutionary Tactic: The Case of Switzerland 1524–1536." A section of Chapter 7 was included in "Prelude to Sedition? Calvin's Attack on Nicodemism and Religious Compromise," Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, 76 (1985). Other brief portions of Chapter 7 appeared in "Calvin and Nicodemism: A Reappraisal," Sixteenth Century Journal, 10 (1979). I am grateful to the editors of these journals for their permission to use this material.
