ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This book would not have been possible without the support of numerous institutions. A grant from the Delaware Institute for Medical Education and Research allowed me to begin laying the groundwork for the study, and a subsequent fellowship from the American Council of Learned Societies provided the means for carrying out part of the work in Paris. I express my special thanks to the staffs of the Archives Nationales, the Bibliothèque Nationale, the Bibliothèque de l'Académie Nationale de Médecine (especially to Monique Chapuis, assistant librarian), and the Bibliothèque de la Faculté de Médecine de Paris. The director of the Service des Archives of the last, Catherine Moureaux, went out of her way to help me locate student records of the physician-legislators and was unfailingly cooperative and generous in giving me her time. The same was true for the late Maurice Daroussin, director of the Service des Archives of the National Assembly, and for his counterpart at the Senate, Gilbert l'Yavanc. I am also indebted to the staff of the College of Physicians of Philadelphia, where I was able to use the college's holdings in the nineteenth-century French medical press, and to the staff of the National Library of Medicine, particularly Dorothy Hanks of the History of Medicine division, who helped me obtain copies of medical theses written by the doctors in my group.

Most of all, I express my appreciation to the University of Delaware – to its Center for Advanced Study, where a fellowship for 1983–4 afforded me time to complete a first draft of the manuscript, and to its excellent library, which provided me with both space and resources for research and writing and whose staff assisted me in every way. Special thanks are owed to Joyce A. Storm, Nancy Froyland-Hoerl, Jon Penn, and Cheryl Thompson of the Reference Department. Leila Lyons and Ken Weiss of Academic

xii Acknowledgments

Computing Services helped me with the quantitative aspects of the study. Michael Patton, then a graduate student in history, rendered enormous services during the initial stages by helping me identify members of parliament before 1914 who held degrees in medicine. My colleagues in the Department of History were especially supportive in their willingness to share their own expertise and to help me clarify my ideas as the work unfolded. I mention especially the names of George Basalla, Willard A. Fletcher, Edward Lurie, and Stephen Lukashevich, the last of whom read an early draft of the manuscript and provided many helpful suggestions relating to both style and content.

Of the many other individuals who helped along the way, I should like to single out Erwin H. Ackerknecht, who encouraged me in my plans and provided copies of some of his own unpublished essays on the medicopolitician, and the late William Coleman, who likewise provided encouragement and support at the outset of the project. Throughout the research and writing, I have profited greatly from the advice of George Weisz of the Department of Humanities and Social Studies in Medicine at McGill University, who read a draft of the manuscript and provided me with invaluable criticisms and insight. I am grateful also to Charles Rosenberg, editor of the Cambridge History of Medicine series, for his advice and suggestions during the final stages of revision. Naturally, all errors of either fact or interpretation are entirely my own.

Last, I express my most heartfelt thanks to my wife, Diane Marie Ellis. From start to finish, I have benefited from her counsel, encouragement, and enthusiasm, not to mention her own considerable knowledge of modern literature and history. It is a pleasure to acknowledge her contributions, without which this book could not have been finished.
