

Contents

|                                                                         |                |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------|
| Preface                                                          | page xi |
| Abbreviations                                                    | xii            |
|                                                                         |                |
| Introduction                                                     | I              |
| ‘Kitsch’                                                                | I              |
| ‘Inclusive’ versus ‘exclusive’ approaches to christology                | 4              |
| 1 Hegel’s christology: ‘The speculative mid-point of philosophy’ | 16             |
| The broader context                                                     | 16             |
| The polemic against theological reductionism                            | 41             |
| Appendix: Gollwitzer’s defence of ‘exclusive’ representation            | 68             |
| 2 Philosophy and dogmatics                                       | 71             |
| A Protestant Aquinas?                                                   | 71             |
| Christology, immortality, ‘pantheism’                                   | 77             |
| The boundary of pure dogmatics                                          | 90             |
| 3 Christology and history                                        | 103            |
| Hegel’s path to the philosophy of history                               | 104            |
| The new priorities – and the Hegelian state                             | 108            |
| Towards a correspondingly enlarged dialectic                            | 122            |
| 4 Hegel’s political theology                                     | 148            |
| Comparison with contemporary ‘political theology’: J. B. Metz           | 148            |
| True citizenship: Hegel and Arendt                                      | 154            |
| Arendt contra Hegel, Hegel contra Arendt                                | 173            |
| 5 Conclusion                                                     | 183            |
| ‘To live within the truth...’                                           | 183            |
|                                                                         |                |
| Notes                                                            | 189            |
| Bibliography                                                     | 225            |
| Index                                                            | 232            |