This short work, written by an influential philosopher of religion, shows how systematic theology is itself largely a philosophical enterprise. After analysing the nature of philosophical inquiry and its relation to systematic theology, and after exploring how theology requires that we talk about God, Vincent Brümmer illustrates how philosophical analysis can help in dealing with various conceptual problems involved in the fundamental Christian claim that God is a personal being with whom we may live in a personal relationship. Special attention is paid to the reason why theodicy arguments often appear insensitive to those who suffer, and therefore fail to offer them consolation, and in this connection the work of recent philosophers such as Richard Swinburne and D. Z. Phillips is evaluated and compared.

Acknowledgements

In writing this book, I have made use of much material which has previously appeared in article form in Dutch or in English in various journals. I wish therefore to acknowledge the use I have been able to make of material taken from the following papers which I have written in the course of a number of years: 'Genade en onwederstandelijkheid' (with Professor C. Graafland), Theologia Reformata, 24 (1981); 'Over God gesproken', Kerk en Theologie, 33 (1982); 'Het kwaad en de goedheid van God', Nederlands Theologisch Tijdschrift, 36 (1982); 'Divine impeccability', Religious Studies, 20 (1984); 'Troost en theodicee', Nederlands Theologisch Tijdschrift, 41 (1987); 'Philosophical theology as conceptual recollection', Neue Zeitschrift für Systematische Theologie und Religionsphilosophie, 32 (1990); 'Farrer, Wiles and the causal joint', Modern Theology, 8 (1992). I would also like to thank the many colleagues who have helped me with criticisms of the ideas presented in these papers. Their comments and suggestions have enabled me to avoid many mistakes and in many ways to strengthen the arguments which I now put forward here. Last but not least, I would like to thank Gijsbert van den Brink and Marcel Sarot for their assistance and their many useful suggestions in preparing the final manuscript of this book.
