What were the possibilities of prose as a medium in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries? And how did it operate in the literary and social worlds? The project of prose in early modern Europe and the New World brings together ten new essays by leading scholars of the literatures of England, Spain, France, Italy, Portugal, and the colonial Americas to answer these questions in wide-ranging ways. Several of the essays shed new light on landmark prose works of the period; some discuss what lesser-known writings reveal about the medium; others move between the literary and the nonliterary to reflect on the medium's intersections with history, fiction, subjectivity, the state, science, and other aspects of social and cultural life. Overall, this collection will provoke an international reconsideration of the remarkable visibility and diversity of the medium of prose in the early modern period.

The last twenty years have seen a broad and vital reinterpretation of the nature of literary texts, a move away from formalism to a sense of literature as an aspect of social, economic, political and cultural history. While the earliest New Historicist work was criticised for a narrow and anecdotal view of history, it also served as an important stimulus for post-structuralist, feminist, Marxist and psychoanalytical work, which in turn has increasingly informed and redirected it. Recent writing on the nature of representation, the historical construction of gender and of the concept of identity itself, on theatre as a political and economic phenomenon and on the ideologies of art generally, reveals the breadth of the field. Cambridge Studies in Renaissance Literature and Culture is designed to offer historically oriented studies of Renaissance literature and theatre which make use of the insights afforded by theoretical perspectives. The view of history envisioned is above all a view of our own history, a reading of the Renaissance for and from our own time.

Roland Greene is chair of the Program in Comparative Literature at the University of Oregon, where he is Professor of Comparative Literature and English. His publications include Post-Petrarchism: Origins and Innovations of the Western Lyric Sequence (1991); a number of the Harvard Library Bulletin (1992) dedicated to materiality in early modern and postmodern poetry; and the section on lyric for the Cambridge History of Literary Criticism, Volume Three: The Renaissance, ed. Glyn P. Norton (forthcoming).

Timothy Hampton teaches French, Comparative Literature, and Italian studies at the University of California, Berkeley. He is the author of Writing from History: The Rhetoric of Exemplarity in Renaissance Literature (1990). His current research involves relationships between literature and political theory in early modern Europe.

Stephanie H. Jed teaches Italian and Comparative Literature at the University of California, San Diego. Her publications include Chaste Thinking: The Rape of Lucretia and the Birth of Humanism (1989). Her current research focuses on the rhetorical organization of knowledge about the Renaissance in Italian libraries and archives as well as the place of such rhetorics in the nineteenth-century formation of the Italian state.

Ann Rosalind Jones is Esther Cloudman Dunn Professor of Comparative Literature at Smith College, and directs the program in that discipline. She has written widely on women's lyric in the Renaissance, including The Currency of Eros: Women's Love Lyric in Europe, 1540–1620 (1990). Her studies of Renaissance prose include articles on Thomas Nashe and Thomas Coryat, on the dialogues of Catherine Des Roches, and on gender ideology in European conduct books. She is currently at work with Peter Stallybrass on Worn Worlds: Clothing and Identity in Renaissance England.

David Scott Kastan is Professor of English and Comparative Literature at Columbia University. He is the author of Shakespeare and the Shapes of Time (1982), and co-editor of Staging the Renaissance: Reinterpretations of Elizabethan and Jacobean Drama (1991) and the forthcoming New History of Early English Drama. He serves as a general editor of the Arden Shakespeare and is presently editing 1 Henry IV for that series.

William H. Sherman is Assistant Professor of English at the University of Maryland, College Park. His research has focused on the interaction of textual and political culture in early modern England, and he has
