

Contents

Preface	page xi
Acknowledgements	xxi
Film, 1895–1995	xxiii
Introduction: the essence of cinema	1
1.1 Film as representation	2
1.2 Film and the visible	3
1.3 Degrees of inessentialness	6
1.4 The visible and the pictorial	7
1.5 Fictional pictures	9
1.6 Documentary and fiction	12
Part I Representation in film
Chapter 1 The myth of illusion	19
1.1 Transparency, likeness and illusionism	19
1.2 Cognitive illusions	22
1.3 Film and dreaming	27
1.4 Perceptual illusionism	28
1.5 The reality of cinematic images	30
1.6 On the motion of images	34
1.7 Two ways or three?	42
Chapter 2 The imprint of nature	48
2.1 Representational media and representational arts	49

Contents

2.2	Presenting and representing	49
2.3	Photographs as evidence	52
2.4	Counterfactual dependence	53
2.5	Inconclusive arguments	56
2.6	The conditions for perception	61
2.7	Putting movement in the picture	69
2.8	The significance of similarity	70
2.9	The aesthetics of photography	72
2.10	Photography, painting and the real	75
Chapter 3 Realism		79
3.1	Depictions	80
3.2	Natural generativity	88
3.3	Nondepictive representation in film and other media	90
3.4	Three kinds of temporality	92
3.5	Representing time by means of time	96
3.6	Spatial representation	103
3.7	Realist film style	106
3.8	The relativity of likeness	108
Chapter 4 Languages of art and languages of film		113
4.1	Finding the thesis	114
4.2	Cinema language and natural language	117
4.3	The shape of natural language	120
4.4	Objections rejected	124
4.5	Interpretation and utterance meaning	126
4.6	Confusions about convention	128
4.7	Relations between images	134
4.8	A language of vision?	136
Part II Imagination
Chapter 5 Imagination, the general theory		141
5.1	Perspective shifts	142
5.2	Simulation	144
5.3	Fiction and two kinds of simulation	152

Contents

5.4	Consequences	155
5.5	The dangers of imagining	162
Chapter 6 Imagination, personal and impersonal		164
6.1	The classical theory	165
6.2	Cinema, theatre and other visual fictions	168
6.3	Against imagining seeing	170
6.4	Impersonal imagining and film	179
6.5	Perceptual imagining	181
6.6	Clarifications and rebuttals	185
6.7	The myth of total cinema	191
6.8	Psychologism	193
6.9	Iconic signs	196
Chapter 7 Travels in narrative time		198
7.1	Tense in film	198
7.2	The proper treatment of anachrony	206
7.3	Is this revisionism?	216
Appendix: anachrony and ellipsis		219
Part III Interpretation
Chapter 8 The interpretive problem		225
8.1	Intersubjective agreement and interpretive principles	226
8.2	Terms and conditions	231
8.3	Interpreting behaviour and interpreting works	235
8.4	Interpreting works as interpreting behaviour	239
8.5	Real authors, implied authors	243
8.6	Why we still need intention	247
8.7	Interpretive deadlock and truth	249
8.8	The evidence for a cinematic interpretation	251
8.9	Implied author and auteur	258
8.10	Structure and function	259
Chapter 9 Narrative and narrators		260
9.1	Implied authors and narrators	261
9.2	The asymmetry between literature and film	265

Contents

9.3	Kinds of unreliability	270
9.4	Ambiguous and unreliable narratives	272
	In conclusion	281
	Named propositions	283
	Bibliography	285
	Index	297