
Contents

Acknowledgments	page xi
Introduction	1
Fictionality as an interdisciplinary problem	1
Possible worlds and fictionality	5
Fictionality and the pragmatics of fiction	9
Fictionality and narrativity	12
1 Possible worlds, fictional worlds	17
Stage I The philosophical notion of possible worlds	18
Stage II Philosophers' approach to fiction	30
Stage III Possible worlds in a wider context	34
2 The possibility of fictional worlds	47
Possible worlds between the disciplines	47
Possibility and actuality	48
Accessibility	61
Possible worlds between the disciplines, again	71
3 The Fictionality of fictional worlds	76
Why is there a problem in defining fictionality?	76
The pragmatics of fiction – its ontological, logical and epistemological distinctive features	87
The autonomy of fiction and the concept of world	96
4 Fictional entities, incomplete beings	108
Existence and fictional existence	108
The incompleteness of fictional entities	114
Are fictional entities equally incomplete?	122
Theories of naming and the completeness of entities	130
Definitization of entities and the completeness of fictional objects	136

Contents

5	Fictional events and the intricacies of plot	144
	Plot-models and their object of investigation	150
	Plot-models and structuralist ideology	156
	Narrative semantics – from syntactic to semantic plot-models	165
	Plot as a constellation of possible worlds	167
6	Focalization and fictional perspective	175
	Is focalization specific to fiction?	175
	Focalization on the fictional world	179
	Types of organization that focalization imposes on fictional domains	184
	Types of organization that narrative modalities impose on fictional domains	191
7	Fictional time	197
	The analogy between time of fiction and time of actuality	199
	The reliance of temporality of fiction on the modal operation of temporal concepts	202
	Conclusion	229
	Bibliography	231
	Index	240