

This accessible and innovative series will stimulate and develop personal research in family and community history, and set it within a wider framework. You will find practical suggestions for research projects, activities to enhance relevant skills and understanding, and ideas about how to exploit appropriate written, oral and visual sources. The series also brings together specialist contributors who use current developments in demography, social and economic history, sociology, historical geography and anthropology to suggest new insights and lines of enquiry. With its aim of placing individual and localized cases in their social and historical context, the series will interest anyone concerned with family and community.

This volume explores the links between communities and families. It opens with a series of case studies of various occupations and goes on to examine social mobility and aspects of community life such as local politics, religion and leisure activities. Suggestions for your own research are provided throughout the book.

Cambridge University Press
978-0-521-46579-3 - Communities and Families
Edited by John Golby
Frontmatter
More information

STUDYING FAMILY AND COMMUNITY HISTORY: 19TH AND 20TH CENTURIES

Series editor: Ruth Finnegan

Volume 1 From family tree to family history, edited by Ruth Finnegan and Michael Drake

Volume 2 From family history to community history, edited by W.T.R. Pryce

Volume 3 Communities and families, edited by John Golby

Volume 4 Sources and methods for family and community historians: a handbook, edited by Michael Drake and Ruth Finnegan

All four titles in the series are published by Cambridge University Press in association with The Open University.

This book forms part of the third-level Open University course DA301 Studying family and community history: 19th and 20th centuries. Other materials associated with the course are:

Drake, M. (ed.) (1994) Time, family and community: perspectives on family and community history, Oxford, Blackwell in association with The Open University (Course Reader).

Braham, P. (ed.) (1993) Using the past: audio-cassettes on sources and methods for family and community historians, a series of six audio-cassettes with accompanying notes, Milton Keynes, The Open University.

Calder, A. and Lockwood, V. (1993) Shooting video history, a video workshop on video recording for family and community historians, with accompanying notes, Milton Keynes, The Open University.

For availability of the video- and audio-cassette materials, contact Open University Educational Enterprises Ltd (OUEE), 12 Cofferidge Close, Stony Stratford, Milton Keynes, MK11 1BY.

If you wish to study this or any other Open University course, details can be obtained from the Central Enquiry Service, PO Box 200, The Open University, Milton Keynes, MK7 6YZ.

Cambridge University Press
978-0-521-46579-3 - Communities and Families
Edited by John Golby
Frontmatter
More information

COMMUNITIES AND FAMILIES

Edited by John Golby

Cambridge University Press
978-0-521-46579-3 - Communities and Families
Edited by John Golby
Frontmatter
More information

Published by the Press Syndicate of the University of Cambridge in association with The Open University
The Pitt Building, Trumpington Street, Cambridge CB2 1RP
40 West 20th Street, New York, NY 10011-4211, USA
10 Stamford Road, Oakleigh, Melbourne 3166, Australia

First published 1994

Copyright © 1994 The Open University

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system or transmitted, in any form or by any means, without written permission from the publisher or a licence from the Copyright Licensing Agency Limited. Details of such licences (for reprographic reproduction) may be obtained from the Copyright Licensing Agency Ltd, 90 Tottenham Court Road, London, W1P 9HE.

Edited, designed and typeset by The Open University

Printed in Great Britain by Butler and Tanner Ltd, Frome

A catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library

Library of Congress Cataloguing-in-Publication data applied for

ISBN 0 521 46003 4 hardback

ISBN 0 521 46579 6 paperback

CONTENTS

LIST OF FIGURES AND TABLES vii

CONTRIBUTORS x

PREFACE xi

INTRODUCTION 1

John Golby

PART I: WORK AND OCCUPATIONS

CHAPTER 1: IDEAS AND DEBATES ON WORK 3

John Golby

- 1 A brief look at the history of work in the British Isles 4
- 2 Four issues in the history of work in the British Isles 7
- 3 Conclusion 10

CHAPTER 2: WORK CASE STUDIES: INDIVIDUAL EXAMPLES 11

- 1 The Arnisons: driver, draper, farmer, soldier, rich man, poor man Monica Shelley 11
- 2 Alfred Williams, railway factory worker John Golby 22
- 3 Police Constable 25 Clive Emsley 29

CHAPTER 3: WORK CASE STUDIES: SOME OCCUPATIONS AND ROLES 38

- 1 Domestic servants Michael Drake 38
- 2 Married women and work John Golby 49
- 3 Entrepreneurship, business and outsiders: some questions Ruth Finnegan 59
- 4 Studying work and occupations: a review Ruth Finnegan 63

CHAPTER 4: WORK AND COMMUNITY: CHANGING OCCUPATIONAL PROFILES 68

Ian Donnachie

- 1 Hierarchy and labour in a rural community, c.1800 69
- 2 An industrial village: the textile community of New Lanark and its workforce in 1885 71
- 3 New communities in the Victorian era: occupations and occupational mobility in the shale-oil industry of West Lothian 78
- 4 Planned twentieth-century communities: changing occupational structures in new towns 84
- 5 Conclusion 88

PART II: CLASS, MOBILITY AND LOCAL POLITICS

CHAPTER 5: SOCIAL MOBILITY 89

Bernard Waites, Michael Drake and Ruth Finnegan

- 1 Studying social mobility 90

- 2 Social mobility in nineteenth-century Britain 93
- 3 Social mobility through marriage: some research exercises 97
 - 4 Studies of twentieth-century mobility 102
 - 5 Social mobility, family and gender 108

CHAPTER 6: PARLIAMENTARY ELECTIONS AND COMMUNITY HISTORY 114

Michael Drake

- 1 Sources 115
- 2 Your community's electoral morphology 119
- 3 Some exercises in voting behaviour 125

CHAPTER 7: LOCAL ELECTIONS IN THE 1920s AND 1930s: NORTHAMPTON 131

David Murray

- 1 Northampton electoral data, 1919–38 132
- 2 Turning out to vote in local elections 140
 - 3 The Liberal Party in decline 148
- 4 Where to find electoral information 152
 - 5 Conclusion 153

PART III: RELIGION, CULTURE AND LEISURE

CHAPTER 8: FAMILY, COMMUNITY AND RELIGION 155

- 1 Religion in nineteenth-century Britain Kate Tiller 156
- 2 Religious pluralism in twentieth-century Britain: some research questions on Hinduism, Sikhism and Islam Terry Thomas 181
 - 3 Religion in Ireland Brenda Collins 184

CHAPTER 9: CULTURAL LIFE 194

John Golby

- 1 Cultural life in the nineteenth century 194
- 2 Cultural life at the turn of the century 202
- 3 Cultural life in the twentieth century 207

PART IV: REFLECTING ON THE ISSUES

CHAPTER 10: CONCLUSION 217

- 1 Families and communities John Golby 217
- 2 What should you do with your research into family and community history? Ruth Finnegan 218
- 3 The study of the past and the responsibilities of the historian Ruth Finnegan 219

EXERCISES: ANSWERS AND COMMENTS 225

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS 233

INDEX 235

LIST OF FIGURES AND TABLES

Figures

- Figure 1.1 The composing room of the Witney Gazette in Oxfordshire, c.1900 8
- Figure 1.2 Employees at the Britannia Works, Banbury, Oxfordshire, c.1900 9
- Figure 2.1 Joseph Arnison (1871–1924) 14
- Figure 2.2 Family tree of the Manchester Arnisons 15
- Figure 2.3 N. Arnison and Sons' draper's shop, Penrith 17
- Figure 2.4 Family tree of the Penrith Arnisons 20
- Figure 2.5 Frontispiece of Life in a railway factory 23
- Figure 2.6 Alfred Williams at the Great Western Railway Works 28
- Figure 2.7 Descriptive register and record of service of PC25, 1882–1906 31
- Figure 3.1 Distribution of domestic servants in Ashford (Kent), 1861 47
- Figure 3.2 Distribution of the major home industries, 1850–1901 53
- Figure 3.3 Mrs Brackenborough, a glover, in Woodstock, c.1900 54
- Figure 3.4 Women at work in the Second World War 57
- Figure 3.5 A market stall in Longsight, Manchester 61
- Figure 4.1 Planned estate villages and location of the Parish of Crossmichael, south-west Scotland 69
- Figure 4.2 New Lanark villagers, c.1890 71
- Figure 4.3 Statement of wages paid at New Lanark, 13 March 1885 73–4
- Figure 4.4 Map of West Lothian shale-oil districts, centred on Broxburn and Uphall 79
- Figure 4.5 Broxburn, West Lothian, c.1920, showing workers' housing and shale-oil plant 84
- Figure 5.1 John and Elizabeth Summers outside their cottage in Hampshire, c.1900 90
- Figure 5.2 Eliza Susannah, youngest daughter of John and Elizabeth 'Butler' 90
- Figure 6.1 Letter of Montague Meryweather announcing his candidature for the 1868 election 116
- Figure 6.2 Part of the Ashford Committee formed to support the candidature of Tufton and Croft at the 1868 election 116
- Figure 6.3 Report on election meeting at Ashford, Kent, 27 October 1868 116
- Figure 6.4 Anti-Tory poster from 1837 117
- Figure 6.5 Handbill produced by Tancred's supporters, 1841 118
- Figure 6.6 Extract from Banbury and Neithrop poll book, 1865 120
- Figure 6.7 Distribution of those of Roebuck's 1841 voters who participated in the 1847 election 127
- Figure 7.1 Local government wards, borough of Northampton, 1920s and 1930s 135
- Figure 7.2 Styles of housing in the Northampton wards of Kingsley and North 143
- Figure 7.3 A model of voter turnout 147
- Figure 7.4 Newspaper advertisement for three Liberal candidates, 1920 149
- Figure 7.5 Local election results in The Northampton Independent, November 1925 151

- Figure 8.1 Dissent in England in 1851: percentage of Dissenter sittings by county 161
 Figure 8.2 Anglican index of attendances: census of religious worship, 1851 162
 Figure 8.3 Anglican percentage share of attendances: census of religious worship, 1851 162
 Figure 8.4 Oxfordshire, 1851: percentage of Dissenter sittings by registration district 163
 Figure 8.5 Example of a chapel return for Hook Norton Baptist Chapel, census of religious worship, 1851 169
 Figure 8.6 Hook Norton 1851 – church and chapel sittings and attendance 170
 Figure 8.7 A typical Anglican Victorian church 174
 Figure 8.8 Geographical distribution of the three principal denominations in Ireland, 1861, 1911, 1961 and 1981 185
 Figure 8.9 Example page for a National School register 188
 Figure 9.1 Eynsham Village Band, 1860s 198
 Figure 9.2 Proclamation preventing the playing of games on Sunday, Eynsham, 1820 199
 Figure 9.3 Eynsham Diamond Jubilee celebrations in the square, 1897 206
 Figure 9.4 The Cock and Bull Band, Milton Keynes 211

Tables

- Table 1.1 Estimated industrial distribution of the British labour force, 1801-1951 4
 Table 1.2 Estimated industrial distribution of the labour force, Ireland 1841 and 1891, and England and Wales 1881 5
 Table 2.1 Occupations in the county of Cumberland, 1851, 1871, 1891 and 1911 13
 Table 2.2 Summary of CEB entries relating to the Arnison family, 1861, 1871 and 1881 14
 Table 2.3 Average day wages paid to men at Swindon Railway Works, July 1914 27
 Table 3.1 Number and ages of domestic servants in the United Kingdom, 1891 39
 Table 3.2 Length of service of female servants, as reported in 1894-8 44
 Table 3.3 Female servants aged 15-19 as % of age group, Yorkshire, 1851 48
 Table 3.4 Married women in Eynsham, 1851 51
 Table 3.5 Occupations of married women in Eynsham, 1851 51
 Table 3.6 Number of women married to agricultural labourers, Eynsham, 1851 52
 Table 3.7 Numbers and percentages of working women by marital status, Eynsham, 1851 52
 Table 3.8 Female labour force by marital status, Great Britain, 1911-1981 56
 Table 4.1 Data on the population of Crossmichael parish, 1791 70
 Table 4.2 Occupations of shale-oil workers in Mid Calder and Kirknewton, 1871 80
 Table 4.3(a) Previous occupations of shale-oil workers, Kirknewton and Mid Calder parishes, 1871, by occupational group 82
 Table 4.3(b) Occupations of fathers of shale workers identified in Kirknewton and Mid Calder, 1871 83
 Table 4.4 Glenrothes: employed residents as % of total in 1954, 1968 and 1974 86
 Table 4.5 Glenrothes: main occupation groups, 1968 and 1974 86
 Table 4.6 Glenrothes: employment status and occupational classes, 1974 86

Table 4.7	East Kilbride: employment, economic classification and unemployment, 1988	87
Table 5.1	Some alternative ranking frameworks used in social mobility studies	92
Table 5.2	Class distribution of grooms by class of father and vice-versa, England, 1839–1914	95
Table 5.3	Percentage of fathers with sons in the various classes, England, 1839–1914	96
Table 5.4	Percentage of grooms with fathers in the various classes, England, 1839–1914	97
Table 5.5	Class origins of brides by that of grooms and vice-versa, Ashford, 1837–70	98
Table 5.6	Percentage of brides (by class origins) by class origin of grooms, Ashford, 1837–70	99
Table 5.7	Percentage of grooms (by class origins) by class origin of brides, Ashford, 1837–1914	99
Table 5.8	Distribution of husbands and wives by social group of origin in Glass's survey, 1949	104
Table 5.9	Class composition by class of father at respondent's age 14, from 1972 survey	106
Table 5.10	Inter-generational male mobility, Scotland, 1973	106
Table 5.11	Disparity ratios showing relative chances of being found in Classes I and II and Classes VI and VII, (a) on entry into work, (b) ten years after entry, and (c) at the time of enquiry (1972)	107
Table 6.1	Increase in the number of parliamentary electors between 1832–3 and 1862–3	121
Table 6.2	Number of votes cast for each candidate and number of abstainers at the Bath parliamentary by-election of 1855	126
Table 6.3	Percentage of the electorate voting in the Bath parishes of St James and Bathwick at the parliamentary elections of 1832, 1835, 1837, 1841 and 1847	126
Table 7.1	Local electoral data for the borough of Northampton, 1919–1930	133–5
Table 7.2	Local electoral data for the borough of Northampton, 1932–1938	136–8
Table 7.3	Level of turnout and male percentage of local electorate, City of Leeds, 1921–37	141
Table 7.4	Voter turnout in wards with two and three party candidates, borough of Northampton, 1919–1938	145
Table 8.1	General religious allegiance in England in 1851	160
Table 8.2	Census of religious worship, 1851: attendances in the registration counties	165
Table 8.3	Census of religious worship, 1851: attendances in London and the 65 large towns	166
Table 8.4	Church and chapel in Hook Norton, census of religious worship, 1851	170
Table 8.5	The evidence of directories: organized religion in Hook Norton, 1830–1939	172
Table 8.6	Annual registration of mosques, 1966–1985	182
Table 9.1	Dates of foundation of voluntary societies active in Banbury between 1830 and 1850	200
Table 9.2	Men and women on committees of voluntary associations, Banbury, 1948–51	208
Table 9.3	Men and women on committees of voluntary associations: Banbury, 1950 and 1966–8 compared	209
Table 10.1	Scottish naming cycle	221

CONTRIBUTORS

Brenda Collins, Social and economic historian; Tutor-counsellor, The Open University in Northern Ireland; Research Officer, Lisburn Museum

Ian Donnachie, Senior Lecturer and Staff Tutor in History, Faculty of Arts and The Open University in Scotland

Michael Drake, Emeritus Professor and first Dean of Faculty of Social Sciences, The Open University; Visiting Professor of History, University of Tromsø

Clive Emsley, Professor of History, Faculty of Arts, The Open University

Ruth Finnegan, Professor in Comparative Social Institutions, Faculty of Social Sciences, The Open University

John Golby, Senior Lecturer and Staff Tutor in History, Faculty of Arts and The Open University (South Region)

David Murray, Professor of Government, Faculty of Social Sciences, The Open University

Monica Shelley, Lecturer in Community Education, School of Health, Welfare and Community Education, The Open University

Terry Thomas, Staff Tutor in Religious Studies, Faculty of Arts and The Open University in Wales

Kate Tiller, Director of Studies in Local and Social History, and University Lecturer, Department of Continuing Education, University of Oxford

Bernard Waites, Lecturer in European Humanities Studies, Faculty of Arts, The Open University

PREFACE

Many thousands of people are currently exploring their family trees or investigating the history of their localities. It is an absorbing hobby – and more than just a hobby. It combines the excitement of the chase and the exercise of demanding investigative skills. It also leads to personal rewards, among them perhaps an enhanced awareness of identity, achieved through the process of searching out your roots within the unending cycle of the past, and something to hold on to in the confusions of the present.

At the same time scholars within a series of social science and historical disciplines are increasingly realizing the value of small-scale case studies, extending and questioning accepted theories through a greater understanding of local and personal diversities. Sociologists now look to individual life histories as well as generalized social structure; geographers emphasize the local as well as the global; demographers explore regional divergences, not just national aggregates; historians extend their research from the doings of the famous to how ‘ordinary people’ pursued their lives at a local level.

This volume and the series of which it is a part have as their central purpose the encouragement of active personal research in family and community history – but research that is also linked to more general findings and insights. The series thus seeks to combine the strengths of two traditions: that of the independent personal researcher into family tree or local history, and that of established academic disciplines in history and the social sciences.

Now is a particularly appropriate moment to bring these two sides together. The networks of family and local historians up and down the country have in the past had scant recognition from within mainstream university circles, which (in contrast to the active involvement of further education and extra-mural departments) have sometimes given the impression of despising the offerings of ‘amateur researchers’. Explicitly academic publications, for their part, have been little read by independent investigators – understandably, perhaps, for, with a few honourable exceptions, such publications have been predominantly directed to specialist colleagues. But there are signs that this situation may be changing. Not only is there our increasing awareness of the research value of micro studies, but higher education as a whole is opening up more flexible ways of learning and is recognizing achievements undertaken outside traditional ‘university walls’. Our hope is to further this trend of mutual understanding, to the benefit of each.

There are thus two main aims in these volumes, overlapping and complementary. The first is to present an interdisciplinary overview of recent scholarly work in family and community history, drawing on the approaches and findings of such subjects as anthropology, social and economic history, sociology, demography, and historical geography. This should be illuminating not only for those seeking an up-to-date review of such work, but also for anyone interested in the functioning of families and communities today – the essential historical background to present-day concerns. The second, equally important aim is to help readers develop their own research interests. The framework here is rather different from traditional genealogy or local history courses (where excellent DIY guides already exist) since our emphasis is on completing a project and relating it to other research findings and theories, rather than on an unending personal quest for yet more and more details. It differs too from most conventional academic publications, in that the focus is on doing research, rather than absorbing or reporting the research of others. These volumes are therefore full of practical advice on sources and methods, as well as illustrations of the kinds of projects that can be followed up by the individual researcher.

Given the infinite scope of the subject and the need to provide practical advice, we have put some limits on the coverage. The timescale is the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, a period for which the sources are plentiful and – for the recent period at least – oral investigation feasible. (The critical assessment and exploitation of primary sources within this timescale will, of course, develop skills which can be extended earlier periods.) There is no attempt to give a detailed historical narrative of nineteenth- and twentieth-century history. Rather we present a blend of specific case studies, findings and theoretical ideas, selected with a view to giving both some taste of recent work, and a context and stimulus for further investigation.

In terms of area, the focus is on the United Kingdom and Ireland, or, to put it differently, on the countries of the British Isles (these and similar terms have both changing historical applications and inescapable political connotations, so since we wish to write without prejudice we have deliberately alternated between them). This focus is applied flexibly, and there is some reference to emigration abroad; but we have not tried to describe sources and experiences overseas. Thus while much of the general theoretical background and even specific ideas for research may relate to many areas of the world, the detailed practical information about sources or record repositories concentrates on those available to students working in England, Ireland (north and south), Scotland and Wales.

The emphasis is also on encouraging small-scale topics. This does not mean that larger patterns are neglected: indeed, like other more generalized findings and theories, they form the background against which smaller studies can be set and compared. But small, manageable projects of the kinds focused on in this volume have two essential merits. First, they link with the emerging appreciation of the value of research into diversities as well as into generalizations: many gaps in our knowledge about particular localities or particular family experiences remain to be filled. Second, they represent a form of research that can be pursued seriously within the resources of independent and part-time researchers.

This third volume focuses on family- or community-based activities that can be studied at a small-scale level such as work, social mobility, local politics, religion, or leisure. It can be read on its own, but it is also linked to the other volumes in the series, which complement and amplify the topics considered here. The companion volumes (listed on p.ii) turn the spotlight on individual families and the broader patterns of family history revealed by recent research (Volume 1); on migration and community (Volume 2); and, in Volume 4, on some of the many sources and methods that can be used to conduct and communicate research in family and community history.

This book forms one part of the Open University course DA301 Studying family and community history: 19th and 20th centuries (the other components are listed on p.ii). DA301 is an honours-level undergraduate course for part-time adult learners studying at a distance, and it is designed to develop the skills, methods and understanding to complete a guided project in family or community history within the time constraints of a one-year course – comparable, therefore, to the dissertation sometimes carried out in the final year of a conventional honours degree. It also looks forward to ways in which such a project could be extended and communicated at a later stage. However, these volumes are also designed to be used, either singly or as a series, by anyone interested in family or community history. The introduction to recent research, together with the practical exercises, advice on the critical exploitation of primary sources, and suggestions for research projects, should be of wide interest and application. Collectively the results of such research should not only develop individuals' investigations but also enhance our more general understanding of family and community history. Much remains to be discovered by the army of amateur and professional researchers throughout the British Isles.

Since a series of this kind obviously depends on the efforts of many people, there are many thanks to express. As in other Open University courses, the material was developed collaboratively. So while authors are responsible for what they have written, they have also been both influenced and supported by other members of the course team: not just its academic contributors, but also those from the editorial, design, and production areas of the university. There was also the highly skilled group who prepared the manuscript for electronic publishing, among them Molly Freeman, Maggie Tebbs, Pauline Turner, Betty Atkinson, Maureen Adams, and above all Dianne Cook, our calm and efficient course secretary throughout most of the production period. For advice and help on various points in this volume we would especially like to thank Janet Arnison (for her unstinting and enthusiastic help with information about the Arnison family), Jacqueline Eustace, Dr Barrie Trinder and Wendy Webster. For the series generally we are greatly indebted to four external critical readers who provided wonderfully detailed comments on successive drafts of the whole text: Brenda Collins, particularly for her informed advice on Ireland; Janet Few, both in her own right and as Education Officer of the Federation of Family History Societies; Dennis Mills, with his unparalleled command not only of the subject matter but of the needs of distance students; and Colin Rogers of the Metropolitan University, Manchester, for sharing the fruits of his long experience in teaching and furthering the study of family history. Finally, particular thanks go to our external assessor, Professor Paul Hair, for his constant challenges, queries and suggestions. Our advisors should not be held responsible for the shortcomings that remain, but without them these volumes would certainly have been both less accurate and less intelligible.

Our list of thanks is a long one and even so does not cover everyone. In our case its scope arises from the particular Open University form of production. But this extensive cooperation also, we think, represents the fruitful blend of individual interest and collaborative effort that is typical in the field of studying family and community history: a form of collaboration in which we hope we can now engage with you, our readers.

USING THIS BOOK

Activities

This volume is designed not just as a text to be read through but also as an active workbook. It is therefore punctuated by a series of activities, signalled by different formats. These include:

- (a) Short questions: these provide the opportunity to stop and consider for a moment before reading on. They are separated from the surrounding text merely by being printed in colour.
- (b) Exercises: these are activities to be carried out as part of working through the text, requiring anything from ten minutes to an hour to complete. Follow-up discussion comes either immediately after in the main text or (when so indicated in the exercise) in the separate comments and answers at the end of the book.
- (c) Questions for research: these are suggestions for longer-term research projects to follow up selectively according to personal interest or opportunity after working through the relevant chapter(s). Note that although there are frequent references to 'your family', in practice any family (or set of families) in which you are interested will do equally well. In fact taking a family on which there are locally available records may be more practicable, as a first stage at least, than chasing the details of your own.

Schemas

These are lists of questions, factors or key theories which can help in formulating research, providing a kind of model or template against which research findings can be compared.

References

While this book is free-standing, there are cross-references to other volumes in the series which appear, for example, as 'see Volume 4, Chapter 6'. This is to aid readers using all the books.

The lists of books or articles at the end of each chapter follow the scholarly convention of giving details of all works cited; they are not intended as obligatory further reading. The asterisked items in these lists are useful starting points for those wishing to go further into the subject.

RUTH FINNEGAN
(Series editor)