Ethnicity, Social Mobility, and Public Policy

This major comparative study of the social mobility of ethnic minorities in the USA and UK argues that social mobility must be understood as a complex and multidimensional phenomenon, incorporating the wealth and income of groups, but also their political power and social recognition. Written by leading sociologists, economists, political scientists, geographers, and philosophers in both countries, the volume addresses issues as diverse as education, work and employment, residential concentration, political mobilization, public policy, and social networks, while drawing larger lessons about the meaning of race and inequality in the two countries. While finding that there are important similarities in the experience of ethnic, and especially immigrant, groups in the two countries, the volume also concludes that the differences between the USA and UK, especially in the case of American blacks, are equally important.

GLENN C. LOURY is Professor of Economics and Director of the Institute on Race and Social Division at Boston University.

TARIQ MODOOD is Professor of Sociology, Politics, and Public Policy and founding Director of the Centre for the Study of Ethnicity and Citizenship, University of Bristol. He has published extensively and was awarded the MBE for services to social science and ethnic relations 2001.

STEVEN M. TELES is Assistant Professor of Politics at Brandeis University. He has published books and articles on a wide range of topics including welfare, affirmative action, devolution in the UK and EU.

Acknowledgements

This book has taken much longer to materialize than we would have wished. We thank all the authors for their patience and willingness to go through multiple revisions in pursuit of an edited work that would genuinely operate as a coherent whole. The first drafts of chapters were presented at a workshop in Bath, England in 1999 and revised drafts were subject to further discussion at the follow-up workshop in Boston, USA in 2000. The two workshops were an expression of the partnership between scholars of two countries and involved many more experts than are authors to this volume. Each workshop included many discussants who made valuable contributions to the general comparative discussion as well as commenting on specific papers. The discussants are too numerous to be named individually but we thank them all.

We also appreciate the hard and patient work of the editors at Cambridge University Press, and in particular the painstaking copy-editing work of Jacque French, and Sarah Caro's continuing commitment to this project through a whole series of revised deadlines.

We are especially grateful to the W. K. Kellogg Foundation for underwriting this work through a very generous grant. This project began under the auspices of the Institute on Race and Social Division at Boston University, and we wish to thank IRSD Administrative Associate Bobbie Patrick for her tireless efforts which helped keep this project on track, as well as the support of Centre for the Study of Ethnicity and Citizenship at Bristol University.

It is an astonishing fact that, but for the current effort, no book exists today which systematically compares the social, economic, and political dimensions of "race" and ethnicity in America and Britain. So, we hope that the appearance of this volume will have been worth the wait.
