Archaeology has often been put to political use, particularly by nationalists. The case studies in this timely collection range from the propaganda purposes served by archaeology in the Nazi state, through the complex interplay of official dogma and academic prehistory in the former Soviet Union, to lesser known instances of ideological archaeology in other European countries, in China, Japan, Korea, and the Near East. The introductory and concluding chapters draw out some of the common threads in these experiences, and argue that archaeologists need to be more sophisticated about the use and abuse of their studies.

The editors have brought together a distinguished international group of scholars. Whilst archaeologists will find that this book raises cogent questions about their own work, these problems also go beyond archaeology to implicate history and anthropology more generally.

Many people – too many to mention – helped us complete this volume; only a few can be explicitly acknowledged here. Antonio Gilman, the then Program Chair of the Archaeology Division of the American Anthropological Association, promoted the symposium in 1991 that resulted in this book. Jessica Kuper, our Editor at Cambridge University Press, correctly urged us to restrict the number of contributions and keep the entire enterprise within a manageable scale. We have tried to adhere to the high standards upon which she insisted and have incorporated the numerous positive suggestions of the two anonymous reviewers for Cambridge University Press. Elena Krasnoperova helped standardize the Russian transliterations, Lothar von Falkenhausen performed the invaluable service of ensuring that all the references in Chinese were accurate and uniform, and Junko Habu assisted with translations from Japanese. We would like to thank Wellesley College and St. Francis Xavier University for technical and financial support throughout this project. Edna Gillis and Sarah Doyle helped greatly in the preparation of the final manuscript; the latter's assistance in compiling the integrated bibliography was particularly invaluable. Barbara Gard deserves special mention for her close reading of the introductory chapter. Finally, we must acknowledge the support and forbearance of all the members of our growing families: Barbara Gard, Owen and Mira Kohl, Eric Atkinson and Marc Fawcett-Atkinson; without them, this book never would have been realized.
