Acknowledgements

This research was partly funded by the 1990 Sir Maurice Byers Fellowship offered by the New South Wales Police Service. I would also like to thank the School of Social Science and Policy, University of New South Wales, for supporting this research through the granting of leave from teaching from 1 July 1991 to 30 June 1992.

Many people currently or previously employed in the New South Wales Police Service made significant contributions to this research. Special thanks are due to Leela Smith and Geoff Bell for their support throughout the initial phase of the project. I would also like to thank the following people for their valuable contributions at various stages of the project: Gerard Banister, David Bradley, Neil Bridge, Brad Cable, Michael Egan, Warren Fletcher, Alison Jaffee, Jeff Jarratt, John McDonald, Peter Miller, Leo Raiti, Paul Talbot and Barrie Thorley. I would also like to thank everyone who participated in the survey and those who consented to be interviewed. I appreciate the time that you took to answer my numerous questions and the frankness with which you expressed your opinions.

I am also grateful for the cooperation and information provided by the Commissioners and contact officers of the Australian Federal Police, the Northern Territory Police, the Queensland Police Service, the South Australian Police Department, the Tasmanian Police, the Victoria Police and the Western Australia Police Department. Their responses to the national survey were enthusiastic and helpful.

Emma Bathie deserves special mention for assisting with several aspects of the project, including the onerous task of data processing. Sally Doran provided valuable editorial assistance to the final manuscript. I would also like to thank Lynne Barnes, Mary Christopher, Rose Egerton, Susanna Lok, Janelle Stevens and John Turner, for assisting with the transcription of the interviews.

I have benefited from my study leave in England and Canada during 1993, especially comments on this research by colleagues who attended my seminars at the Centre for Criminological Research, University of Oxford; Centre for the Study of Public Order, University of Leicester; and the School of Criminology, Simon Fraser University.

Various people have generously provided comments on earlier drafts of selected chapters: Richard Ericson, David Dixon, Andrew Goldsmith, Simon Holdaway, Peter Manning, Peter Saunders, Joanna Shapland, and anonymous reviewers from the Cambridge University Press and the British Journal of Criminology. I am indebted to their insightful suggestions and constructive criticisms. My only concern is that I may not have adequately addressed the issues they raised.

I would also like to thank Phillipa McGuinness of Cambridge University Press for her kind support and encouragement throughout the conceptualisation and production of this book, Jane Farago and Janet Mackenzie for their editorial support, and Diana Encel for compiling the index.

My personal thanks go to Peter Saunders who is always positive and supportive even when I falter, and to my children Karen and Kenneth who never complain that I spend too much time on my work. I am also grateful for Karen's editorial help when I needed it most. This book would not have been possible without the loving environment you have all contributed to.

Sydney

Some of the material in this book has appeared in J. Chan (1996) 'Police Racism: Experiences and Reforms' in E. Vasta and S. Castles (eds) The Teeth are Smiling: The Persistence of Racism in Multicultural Australia Sydney: Allen & Unwin. Chapter 4 contains a revised version of part of a paper by J. Chan, 'Changing Police Culture', published in the British Journal of Criminology (1996) volume 36, number 1, used with permission from Oxford University Press. Chapter 8 is a revised version of a paper by J. Chan, 'Damage Control: Media Representation and Responses to Police Deviance', published in Law/Text/Culture (1996) volume 2, used with permission from the publisher of the journal. Extracts from other sources are reproduced by permission of the Police Association of New South Wales, the New South Wales Police Service, the Sydney Morning Herald, and Mr Tom Gilling.
