Acknowledgments

I count myself lucky to have received tremendous assistance from many people and institutions in completing this book. I hope I have acknowledged most of these debts of inspiration and insight in notes to the text. Here I wish to mention those who might otherwise remain invisible behind the fiction of solitary authorship.

I was a recipient of a Commonwealth Postgraduate Research Award, an Australian Postgraduate Research Award and a Caroline Kay Scholarship at various times while researching aspects of this work. Casual and part-time employment, which kept me going, was facilitated by Denis Altman, Lloyd Robson, Stuart Macintyre and Lynne Wrouth. Under difficult circumstances the History Department at the University of Melbourne provided resources and space. Tangential work as a visiting fellow at the Australian National University Humanities Research Centre and through an Australian Research Council funded project in 'Official History' also contributed indirectly to this study. I have benefited enormously from the collections in the Baillieu Library, University of Melbourne, the State Library of Victoria, the National Library of Australia and the Mitchell Library. The English Department, the 'home' of Cultural Studies at the University of Melbourne, has been an environment which encourages intellectual work. Here I record my appreciation for all this support.

I learned a great deal from studying with Greg Denning at the University of Melbourne and Richard Johnson at the University of Birmingham and from working with Ann Curthoys at the University of Technology, Sydney. Stuart Macintyre was a dedicated supervisor who shared his vast knowledge of Australian history. These people showed me some of the markers on the trails that I have followed here. Various conversations with and encouragement from Tony Birch, Michael Cathcart, Dipesh Chakrabarty, Kate Darian-Smith, David Goodman, Paula Hamilton, Sue Janson, Andy May, Phillipa Rothfield, and Al Thomson shaped my thinking here. Stephen Bann, Paul Carter, Meaghan Morris, David Walker, Phillipa McGuinness at Cambridge University Press and an anonymous reader all took the time to respond to earlier versions of this book in ways which helped it become what you have here. I am also indebted to Hilary Ericksen and Kerry Goldsworthy who encouraged me to rewrite passages of tangled and tortured prose, to Jane Farago who oversaw the production of the book and to Sally Nicholls who copy-edited the book but the idiosyncrasies, errors, omissions and confusion which remain here are mine alone.

My friends; my brothers, Paul, Mark and Matt; my parents, Tom and Bev; and my partner, Kerstin Thompson, have watched and listened and offered succour over the last few years. For this (and much else besides), thank you.
