

Contents

	Preface	page xiii
1	Introduction: the case of twentieth-century England	1
	The uniqueness of the case	1
	A capitalist mode of production	13
	A liberal mode of persuasion	22
	A democratic mode of coercion	30
	The 'Victorian' legacy	38
	Conclusion	54
2	The case reported	56
	The pattern of roles	56
	Economic evolution	68
	Ideological evolution	82
	Political evolution	94
	Mobility, individual and collective	104
	Inter-societal decline	118
	Conclusion	126
3	The case explained	127
	Selective pressures and institutional constraints	127
	Mutations and their functions in the mode of production	138
	Mutations and their functions in the mode of persuasion	153
	Mutations and their functions in the mode of coercion	163
	Adaptive affinities	173
	Conclusion	187
4	The case described	189
	Authentic experiences and representative biographies	189
	Life at the top	200
	Upper-, middle-, and lower-middle	212
	Workers, more skilled and less	230
	Life at the bottom	253
	Conclusion	264

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-58801-0 - A Treatise on Social Theory, Volume III: Applied Social Theory

W. G. Runciman

Table of Contents

More information

xii

CONTENTS

5	The case evaluated	266
	Satisfactions and resentments	266
	Material progress	272
	Respect and self-respect	280
	'Power to the people'	289
	Well-being or welfare?	297
	Conclusion	303
	List of references	304
	Index	326