What is it like to be Jewish and to be born and raised in Germany after the Holocaust? Based on remarkably candid interviews with nearly one hundred German Jews, Lynn Rapaport's book reveals a rare understanding of how the memory of the Holocaust shapes Jews' everyday lives. As their views of non-Jewish Germans, of themselves, their political integration into German society, and their friendships and relationships with Germans are subtly uncovered, the obstacles to readjustment when sociocultural memory is still present are better understood. This is also a book about Jewish identity in the midst of modernity. It shows how the boundaries of ethnicity are not marked by how religious Jews are, or their absorption of traditional culture, but by the moral distinctions rooted in Holocaust memory that Jews draw between themselves and other Germans.

Acknowledgments

What a thrill to write the acknowledgments for this book, and what a challenge to try to thank all those who have helped me in big and small ways. Unfortunately, because of space limitations and obligations of confidentiality, I can only acknowledge a few people by name, and apologize to those not mentioned. Foremost, I am greatly indebted to the interviewees who generously shared their lives with me and showed me their courage and pain. In Germany, Wilfred Kaib, Dieter Klein, Ernst Maug, and Stefan Szajak facilitated my research in very practical ways.

I was fortunate to be guided at different stages of this work by two great sociologists, Herbert Gans and Jeffrey Alexander. As my dissertation advisor, Herbert Gans taught me to be a careful fieldworker, to be true to my data, and most importantly, to be an independent and critical thinker. Jeffrey Alexander nurtured this project from a dissertation to a book – his enthusiasm was encouraging and his concrete suggestions inspiring, as he helped me frame my argument more deeply in cultural studies. I will always be grateful to both of them.

Several other colleagues read most, if not all, of earlier drafts of this work, including Anny Bakalian, Jonathan Cole, Lily Gardner Feldman, Saul Friedlander, Eric Hirsch, Terese Lyons, Charles Meier, Peter Marcuse, Jeffrey Peck, Monika Richarz, Gunther Roth, Ernestine Schlant, and Allan Silver. I thank them for their comments and constructive suggestions, and apologize for any remaining unrealized. Thanks also to Rebecca Boehling, Gayle Hamilton, Robert Herman, Greg Hoertz, Jackson Janes, Christian Joppke, Anna Karpathakis, Philip Kasinitz, Robert Markens, Manfred Stassen, and George Steinmetz. Some of them listened patiently while I thought out loud. Others showed much appreciated support at important times. Jurgen Froehlich double-checked my German, and Maxine Rude and Yad Vashem

Archives generously supplied the photos used to create the cover. A special thanks to Sheila Pinkel, a real trooper, for creating the final photograph for the cover, and to my colleague and pal, Lynn Mulkey, for trying to keep me sane (though not always successfully) during the project's final stages. I am also especially thankful to Christian Klingenberg and to my father, Mayer Rapaport, who, in their own ways, helped inspire the idea for this book, and to my mother, Ryvka Rapaport, whose memory motivated me to pursue it.

I received generous support from a number of institutions including the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences of Columbia University, Pomona College, the German Academic Exchange Service (DAAD), the Fredrich Ebert Foundation, the American Association of University Women, and the Robert Bosch Foundation. The final draft of this book was written at the American Institute for Contemporary German Studies at Johns Hopkins University, which provided an ideal setting for informal discussions of work in progress, and a Bosch seminar that brought several prominent scholars to the institute to read and critique my work.

At Cambridge University Press, this book benefited from the expert advice of the series editor, Catherine Max, and the careful attention of the copyeditor, Sheila Kane.

Finally, my ex-husband, Stephen V. Marks, deserves a medal of honor! He has read the entire manuscript more times than I had the right to ask. His computer and editorial skills have been invaluable.
