

---

Contents

---

|                                                                                                                    |                |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------|
| Acknowledgments                                                                                             | page ix |
| Introduction                                                                                                       | 1              |
| 1 Reconsidering Gorgias , Phaedrus , and Platonic rhetoric                                           | 17             |
| 2 Why Aristotle's notion of rhetoric and scienceis important for contemporary critical practice                | 38             |
| 3 A (rhetorical) reading of the human sciences:toward antifoundationalism                                      | 60             |
| 4 Rorty and the mirror of nature: hermeneutics andthe possibility of social change                             | 95             |
| 5 Louise Phelps and Theory: toward a human sciencedisciplined by practical wisdom                              | 130            |
| 6 Liberatory pedagogy, conceptual knowledge:toward a practical wisdom disciplined by scientificobservation | 161            |
| 7 Toward a materialist rhetoric: writing the conditionsof the incommensurable                                  | 213            |
| Works cited                                                                                                 | 239            |
| Index                                                                                                       | 247            |