Acknowledgements

This study began its life as a doctoral dissertation at the University of Adelaide. Over the several years in which it has slowly taken shape, numerous people have helped to make it possible. I owe thanks first of all to my supervisors, Professor Andrew Watson and Dr Susan Magarey. Andrew Watson, in particular, was a most valuable source of advice and support and provided a much appreciated critique of my arguments.

For their generous help with my fieldwork in China, and for discussing their research with me, I wish to thank Li Ling from the Rural Development Institute, the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences; Ran Moying, Ning Dong and Duan Chende from the Research Office of the Sichuan Provincial Women's Federation; Xu Min and Xu Tianqi from Hangzhou University; and Wang Jingling from the Zhejiang Academy of Social Sciences.

I wish to thank Associate Professor Beverley Hooper, Associate Professor Tim Wright, Dr Susan Young and Sally Sargeson for support and advice; Katryn Obenhaus for invaluable help with the preparation of tables and Jocelyn Grace for proof reading. Dr Delia Davin gave me much encouragement and made helpful comments on the manuscript, for which I am very grateful. I would also like to thank my anonymous readers for their valuable comments.

I am particularly grateful to my mother, Eleanor Jacka, for her advice and help with editing, and to her and Josko Petkovic for being so supportive.

Funding for fieldwork carried out in 1989 was provided by two travel grants for which I thank the University of Adelaide. I am also grateful to Murdoch University and to the Australian Research Council for two grants provided in 1995.

Finally, and above all, I would like to thank the numerous rural women that I talked to in Beijing, Hangzhou, Shandong and Sichuan, who gave me their time and support, and who taught me so much. Without them, this study would not have been possible. I alone, though, am responsible for any weaknesses in the final product.

Earlier and briefer versions of parts of Chapters 2, 3, 6, 7 and 8 appeared in 'The public/private dichotomy and the gender division of rural labour', in Andrew Watson, ed., Economic Reform and Social Change in China, Routledge, London and New York, 1992, pp. 117–143.
