

Court Reporting in Australia

Court Reporting in Australia uses the experience of reporters and subeditors to present a practical view of reporting on the legal system. Peter Gregory avoids the rigid fashion in which media law matters are usually described and, while he covers such vital areas as defamation and contempt, he focuses on the experiences and lessons to be learned from court reporters on the job. He highlights the problems and common mistakes likely to land journalists and media organisations in trouble.

Court Reporting in Australia describes the different requirements for print and broadcast media. It features information and realistic advice from court reporters working for metropolitan media outlets as well as revealing how they perform their daily tasks. Practical and useful as well as theoretical, no one who reports on legal matters can afford to be without this book.

Peter Gregory is the Chief Court Reporter with The Age newspaper. He has been a journalist for 23 years, most of which has been spent covering courts.

Acknowledgments

This book developed from training sessions held with young journalists. Fairfax training experts Colin McKinnon and Jacqui Cheng deserve recognition for their encouragement, as do the trainees, who kindly stayed awake during my talks.

Victorian Supreme court media officer Prue Innes has supported the project with information and contacts. She has been a great sounding board, and an enthusiastic supporter of open courts. Ms Innes, other court media representatives and administrators have been generous in answering my questions. They have answered promptly, sometimes at short notice.

The librarians at The Age are great researchers, and have been for many years. They are tremendous at turning speculative inquiries into concrete results. Court reporting colleagues have helped greatly by supplying examples and anecdotes, and taking part in the fictional exercise for one of our chapters. It was initially called 'Fun-filled Friday at the Courts', and promoted horror and creativity among the respondents.

Thanks are due to the media lawyers at Minter Ellison Lawyers, and the Communications Law Centre, for the information about defamation and contempt published in a number of media guides. They provided practical advice about difficult topics.

My first journalism lecturer, John Henningham, helped me in a number of ways. He supplied articles, gave advice about topics and chapter construction, and introduced me to Jill Henry, from Cambridge University Press. Ms Henry, as publisher, and her assistant, Karen Hildebrandt, kept me on track and reduced my doubts.

viii Acknowledgments

The greatest debt is owed to my wife, Julie, and daughter, Jess. They used patience, counselling and more patience to keep me on track. They also gave practical help in producing the manuscript, as did Claire Sasaki.

Finally, thanks to my parents, who bought books for me and encouraged me to study.
