

Index

- Abercromby, James, 195–202; colonial consent in antiquity, 253; colonial taxation in antiquity, 251; imperial theory, 196–7; liberty, 198, 202; parallel between Greek and American colonies, 198–9; between Roman and American colonies, 199–201; sovereignty and empire, 197–8
- Alamos de Barrientos, Balthasar, 33 ambassador, as a characteristic reason of state figure, 48–9, 53–6
- America, Americans, 1, 13, 15
 American Revolution, 16
- Aquinas, Thomas, 2
- Aristotle, 2, 24, 56, 57
- Arnall, William, Cicero and Clodius, 89–90 astuteness, distinct from prudence, 48, 48n138
- Athens, ancient model of corruption by luxury, 107–8; Burke's attack on, 120–1; eighteenth-century critics, 120
- Bailyn, Bernard, 3, 15
- Balguy, Thomas, limited toleration, 303–4; rejection of private judgment, 306–9
- Barbeyrac, Jean, on Cicero, 25 n16, 72 n30; citing Charron on mixed prudence, 71 n228; Grotius' notion of colonies, 198 n228; interpreter of Cumberland, 269–70; interpreter of Grotius, 64–5, interpreter of Pufendorf, 71; link between Stoicism and Newtonianism, 277–8; moral realist reading of Grotius and Cumberland, 274–6; on religious toleration, 298 n12
- Bate's Case, 41
- Bireley, Robert, 6 n9
- Black, Antony, 2 n1, 6 n9
- Blackburne, Francis attack on religion as interest of state, 309–13; catalyst of toleration debate, 297
- Blackstone, William, 15; attacked by dissenters, 304–5; on civil liberty, 134–6; defense of state religion, 304–5; on law, 136; Locke, 136, 246–7; and modern natural law, 244–6; on prerogative and public good, 128–30; on representation, 244–7; virtual representation, 261
- Bodin, Jean, 12
- Bolingbroke, Henry St. John, Viscount attack on Cicero, 92 n16; Essay on a Patriot King, 95; liberty, 103; repudiated by Pownall, 203
- Botero, Giovanni, defines reason of state, 29; distinguishes prudence from astuteness, 48; on political economy, 32, 32 n49; princes led by interest, 36 n75; on usefulness of state religion, 34 n61, n63
- Bouwsma, William, 103 n56
- Britain, Great eighteenth century as an early modern state, 12; national identity, 16–17
- British empire, affinity to Greek colonies, according to Smith, 404–5; in America, 14; analysed with ancient Greek history, 192–3; with ancient Roman history, 193–4; Burke on, 179–80; claim to colonies, 217–20; as composite monarchy, 215–17; crisis of, 15, 18; 'expediency' as governing principle of, 212 n292; importance of colonies for, 161–5; and national interest, 160–1; natural size of, 184–5, 189–90; and nature of 'realm', 226–38; political economy of, 151–6, 159–66; political economy challenged by new theory of representation, 263–4; political economy of challenged by Smith, 402–4; and state bound together, 150; and taxation, 240–1; unprecedentedness of post-1763 world, 180–3

Cambridge University Press

052161712X - Defining the Common Good: Empire, Religion and Philosophy in Eighteenth-Century Britain

Peter N. Miller

Index

More information

464

Index

- Brown, John, 106–13; admiration of France, 114; on arts, 107–8; centrality of liberty, 106–7, 116; on commerce, 107, 110; defense of liberty of thought, 333–4; distinction between natural and civil liberty, 111; on importance of manners, education and religion, 111–12; as interpreter of Machiavelli, 108, 116; and moral reformation, 106, 110; on nature of parliamentary corruption, 109; on patriot minister, 110; rejection of liberty of thought, 335–6; on self-interest, 109
- Burgh, James, commercial regulation unjust if promulgated by unreformed parliament, 359–60; and empire, 194; on manners, 134; personal liberty, 357; reform of corruption, especially parliamentary, 357–9; on Samuel Clarke and liberty, 288–9
- Burke, Edmund, as annotator of Pownall, 226; on British Empire, 179–80, 167, 403–4; as commentator on revolution of, 1688, 88; criticized by Cartwright, 355 n18, 362 n54, 365; criticized by Tucker, 185; defense of ‘tradition’, 307 n169; on imperial size, 184–5, 191
- Bute, Earl of, 174–5
- Campbell, John on commerce and manners, 122–4; on empire, 160–4, 169
- Canada, 177–8
- Canada–Guadaloupe debate and imperial political economy, 172–4
- Carneades, 56 n170, confronted by Grotius, 63–4; confronted by Pufendorf, 68; confronted by Tunstall, 139
- Carracci, Annibale, 140
- Carthage as an exemplar for Britain, 114–16
- Cartwright, John, commercial regulation unjust if promulgated by unreformed parliament, 359–60; critic of Burke, 355 n18, 362 n54, 365; family metaphor, 354–5; moral realism and natural rights, 353–4; notion of ‘independence’, 361; parliamentary reform based on natural equality and individual liberty, 368–73; reform of empire, 360, 361–3; rejection of virtual representation, 355–6; representation and empire, 363; sovereignty of individuals, 355
- Catalonia and crisis of composite monarchy, 14
- Catilinarian conspiracy as case of necessity, 24
- Cato the Elder, caricatured by Cicero as example of Old Stoa, 24
- Cato’s Letters* on empire and size, 189
- Charles I (Stuart), 32, 39
- Charles V (of the Empire), 14
- Charron, Pierre, analysis of prudence, 31 n43; and deception, 50 n146, 53 n158; on Lipsius, 52 n153; on mixed prudence, 53 n155, 54 n159–60; use of salus populi, 41
- Cicero, political thought importance of, 5–6; and Counter-Reformation, 7; and idea of friendship, 8; and early modern statecraft, 28–9; as guide to prudent statesmanship and communal self-preservation, 9, 267; on honestum and utile, 25–7, 50–54, 56–9; interpreted by Clarke as a moral realist, 267, 280–3; interpreted by Cumberland, 272–4; interpreted by Kant, 419–20; interpreted by Price, 291–3; middle Stoicism, 24–5; as middle Stoic in Middleton’s biography, 90–1; as middle Stoic by Tunstall, 138–42; as middle stoic by Rutherford, 145–6; as model for patriot minister, 89–95, 97; and natural religion, 91; on public security, 23–4; use by Grotius, 61–2; use by Pufendorf, 68–72; use by Pufendorf against Hobbes, 267; use by Samuel Clarke against sceptical atheists, 267; usefulness in composite states, 7–8, 13
- citizen, ideal, 17
- civilized monarchy, 124
- Clark, Jonathan, 89 n88, 195, 297 n116, 352 n53, 366
- Clarke, Samuel break with Grotian reading of Cicero, 281; Burgh on, 288–9; conflation of Stoicism and moral realism to answer sceptics, 278–84; Glover’s reading of, 287; on Hobbesian menace, 283, 286; intellectual lineage, 284–5; interpreter of Cicero, 267, 280–3; Jackson’s reading of, 285–6; moral theory attacked by Rutherford, 144; Price on, 289–95; relationship to Cumberland, 283–4; seen as cause of American Revolution, 388; transformation into ideology of intellectual liberty, 288; and Warburton on free thought, 301; Wollaston’s reading of, 286–7
- Colish, Marcia, on Cicero’s political thought, 25 n17, 26
- Colley, Linda, 15 n29, 98 n43

Cambridge University Press

052161712X - Defining the Common Good: Empire, Religion and Philosophy in Eighteenth-Century Britain

Peter N. Miller

Index

More information

Index

465

- colonies, British North American, 1, 12; claim to, 217–20; importance theorized, 165–6; and political economy of empire, 161–5, 170; and state security, 157
- commerce and political economy, 33, 35; productive of luxury and corruption of manners, 110, 116; see British empire, political economy
- commercial warfare, 33; criticized by Tucker, 400; by Smith, 402
- common good (or public good) early modern definitions of, 1–4, 8, 10; discussed by Cumberland, 270; and English civil war, 47–8; and ideas of community, 16–17, 38; justifies fraud, 49–52, 56; language used in the absence of ‘sovereignty’, 12; legitimates injustice, 33, 36; and national identity, 15; and salus populi, 38–44; see also Britain, political economy of empire, necessity, patriotism, public good,
reason of state
- Commonwealth, Commonwealthmen, defined, 102–3; on history, 104; on liberty, 103
- community and public utility, 15–17, 35–7
- composite monarchy, (. . . state), English problems, 13–14; multiple kingdom, 7, 29–30; not an empire, 14–15
- consent, 46
- conservation and reason of state, 27, 33–7, 41, 45, 50–4
- constancy (inconstancy), 54
- constitution, constitutional, 13, 47
- Counter-Reformation political thought, character of, 7; see also reason of state,
common good
- country opposition, 98; ideology, 159–60
coup d'état, 57
- Croll, Morris, 21 n1
- Cumberland, Richard, on common good, 270–3; on friendship, 270; interpreted by Barbeyrac, 269–70; link with Clarke, 283–4; neo-Stoicism, 273–4; parallel to Pufendorf, 269–70; use of Stoicism against Hobbesian prudentialism, 269–70
- Cumberland, Richard (playwright) on Cicero as patriot, 94–5
- Davenant, Charles, on France, 168;
political economy, 155–9; on religion and manners, 158
- de Lolme, Jean-Louis on civil liberty, 135
- de Sousa, Norberto, 25 n15
- deception legitimate in service of public, 48–57, 94
- dissenters (English rational), 17, 19;
histories of the Reformation, 322;
self-image, 319–20
- divine right monarchy, 14
- Dunn, John, 128 n160, n162; on Locke’s notion of friendship, 270 n8;
on limit of Locke’s toleration, 315 n196; on pre-conditions for toleration, 332
- Dutch model of political economy in eighteenth century, 122–3; Revolt, 14
- Egmont, Lord see also Perceval, John
- Eliot, John, Cicero and fraud, 50; Cicero and public utility, 51, 58–9; on composite state, 30 n40; implications of necessity, 43; necessity of religious homogeneity,
34 n62; priority of public good, 36–7
- Elliott, J.H., on composite state, 8 n13, 30, 30 n39
- empire early modern, 14; Harrington on size of empire, 187–9; Machiavelli on size of, 186; Montesquieu on size of empire, 186–7; see also Britain, empire
- England, composite state, 12, 30; civil war, 13, 30
- enlightenment, 2, 3 n4, 21 n1
- establishments (religious), 19
- Evans, R. J. W., Habsburg monarchy as composite state, 10–11 n18–20
- ‘family’ metaphor for colonial obligation, 222–3
- Federalist Papers* continuity with Grotian
theme of justice at home in an unjust world, 417; response to problems of reason of state literature, 415–7
- Ferguson, Adam on Price, 382, 391–2
- Fernandez Navarrete, Pedro Conservación de Monarquías, 32
- Fielding, Henry, True Patriot, 95
- Filmer, Robert on discretionary power, 47, 53 n155; on law, 134 n183
- Firebrace, John on religious toleration, 311
- Fownes, Joseph on religious toleration, 331
- France, as a model for Britain, 114; model for empire, 157, 166–8
- model for patriotism, 159; rival of Britain, 179
- Franklin, Benjamin, 179
- friendship, Cicero’s idea of, 8; early modern ideas of and community, 37–8; Locke on, 270 n8; Thomistic idea of, 8 n12
- Furieux, Philip, attack on Blackstone, 304–5; on religious toleration, 323–4

- Gallicanism and reason of state, 6
- Gentillet, Innocent, difference between astuteness and prudence, 48 n138; on friendship, 37
- Gibbon, Edward, on danger of private judgment, 308
- Glover, Philip, on intellectual liberty, 286–7
- Goldie, Mark, 79 n260, 85 n287
- Goldsmith, Oliver, mocking commonwealth liberty, 133
- Gordon, Thomas, Political Discourses, 92; defence of Cicero as ministerial patriot, 92–4
- Greek colonies, Abercromby on, 198–9; North American colonies compared to, 192–3; Smith on, 404–5
- Grotius, Hugo, Barbeyrac's interpretation of, 275–6; on Cicero, 61–2; contribution to statecraft, 11; distinction between civil and political liberty, 130–1; on Greek colonies attacked by Abercromby, 198; invoked to defend, 1688, 80; on justice in a world of state competition, 414–15; moral realism, 269; on natural law, 56–65; and Paley, 395, 399; and Priestley, 261; on provincial government, 237–8; Rutherford's lectures on, 142–9; on scepticism, 63–5; transformation of neo-Stoicism, 268; use of Cicero, 268
- Guez de Balzac, Jean-Louis on public utility, 39 n88
- Guicciardini, Francesco, on 'civil' liberty, 36 n72; public good the measure of politics, 38 n83; wealth prerequisite for power, 32 n48
- Gunn, J. A. W., 9 n15
- Gustavus Adolphus, on 'civil' liberty, 36 n72; public good the measure of politics, 38 n83; reliance on Grotius, 65; and Swedish state strategy, 31, 31 n45
- Habsburg(s), 31
monarchy, as model composite state, 11
Spanish, 14
- Halifax, Lord, see George Savile
- Hall, John, public utility, 42; reason of state and political economy, 33
- Hampden, John, Ship Money trial, 44
- Harrington, James, on empire, 187–9; on government, 376; on provincial government, 236–7
- Hervey, Lord John, 89, 91
- Hoadly, Benjamin, on public good defense of, 1688, 81–2
- Hobbes, Thomas, 12; attacked by Clarke via Collins, 278; attacked by Pufendorf with Cicero, 267; on representation, 241–2
- honestas*, honestum, honesto, onesto, and Cicero, 6–7, 13, 18, 23–8, 50–9, use by Grotius, 62; use by Pufendorf, 68–9
- Hont, Istvan, on danger of collapse of public credit, 174, 418; on Davenant's political economy, 153 n10; on Hume, 125
- Horace, as used by Grotius, 61; as used by Tunstall, 139
- Hulme, Obadiah, theory of representation, 259–60; use of Saxon history, 260, 260 n214, 261
- Hume, David, on Cicero, 124; on claim to empire, 218–19; on danger of financial collapse, 174–5; on Grotian distinction between civil and political liberty, 131; interpreting Harrington, 126, interpreting reason of state, 126–7; on necessity, 125; on prudent politics, 124–7; on role of history in political theory, 125, 127; on toleration, 300–1, 320
- Hunton, Philip, on mixed polity, 47
- Hutcheson, Francis, on claim to empire, 218
- Ibbot, Benjamin, 317
inquiry, free, 17
interests, as influencing commands of princes, 38; opposed to justice by Carneades, 63; private a threat to public good, 37–8, 42, 48, 65; reconciled with patriotism, 101; and public good, 26, 36, 51
- Ireland, Irish, 13
- Israel, Jonathan I., 33, 33 n56
- Jackson, John on public good, 82–83; on Samuel Clarke, 284–5
- Jacobitism, 14
- Johnson, Samuel, claim to empire, 218; on empire, 168, 190; on liberty, 123; on purpose of colonies, 222
- Jonson, Ben, 27
just, justice, and politics, 26–7; mingled with prudence, 41, 53, 56
- Kant, Immanuel, on Cicero, 419–20; on Grotius, 419; international order as a pre-condition to the just constitution, 418–19; 'necessity' as a threat to justice, 418, 421

Cambridge University Press
052161712X - Defining the Common Good: Empire, Religion and Philosophy in Eighteenth-Century Britain

Peter N. Miller

Index

More information

- Kapossy, Béla, 67 n214
Keohane, Nannerl, 9, 9 n14, 34, 38
Koenigsberger, Helmut, on composite state, 11, 11 n18, 12, 12 n22, 29, 30
- Lawson, George, on representation, 242–3;
on use of 'virtual', 250
lawyers, contrasted with statesmen, 48, 50, 50 n145
liberty, Brown's distinction between natural and civil, 111; civil – Blackstone on, 134–6; Priestley on, 134; de Lolme on,
135 in Commonwealth tradition, 103;
mocked by Goldsmith, 133;
Rutherford on, 147–8; of thought, 17,
327–331; see also Burgh, James,
Machiavelli, Niccolò, Price, Richard,
Priestley, Joseph
Lieberman, David, 244
Lind, John, and Bentham on Price, 382, 385–7, 389–90, 394–7; on virtual
representation, 250
Lipsius, Justus and Charron, 41, 52; and friendship, 38; neo-Stoicism, 8;
political thought, 35–6, 57; and Vera y
Figuroa, 49, 55–6
Locke, John, on friendship, 270 n8; on human authority, 313; on public good and prerogative, 128; religious toleration and its limits, 298, 314–16; on representation, 244; and sovereignty, 247; on statecraft and prerogative, 77–8
Lorenzetti, Ambrogio, 9
Lyttelton, Lord George, on claims to empire, 219–220
- Maccaulay, Catharine, 368
Machiavelli, Niccolò attacked for evil statecraft, 5, 28, 37, 52–3; and civic religion, 34, 50, 52–3 common good and republicanism, 2–4; on maintaining one's state, 3, 32
Mandeville, Bernard on public good, 85–6 manners, Burgh on, 134; and constitution, 105; danger of corruption, 105, 112;
and decline of Roman republic, 109;
Priestley's rejection of ancient, 134;
and security, 157–8; and stability, 111;
threatened by commerce and luxury,
110, 116; threatened by innovation,
113; threatened by Italian opera, 108
Manwaring, Roger, on reason of state,
36 n75
Marquez, Juan de, on mixed prudence, 52,
53 n155
- Mattingly, Garret, 49
Maxwell, John, 42
McCulloh, Henry, 166–7
Meinecke, Friedrich, 4
mercantilism, 33, 152
metropolis and empire, 14
Middleton, Conyers, Life of Cicero, 90–2 ministerial government, 18; Cicero the model, 94–5; corruption, 97;
patriotism, 92; prudence, 97, 100–2 ministers, patriotic as redemptive, 110; and
reason of state, 57
Mitchell, John, 169
modern republic, 124; see also civilized monarchy
Montagu, Edward Wortley Jr., on history and politics, 104; on manners and decline of Roman republic, 109–10; on Sparta and Athens, 108; use of Carthage as parallel to Britain, 114–16
Montaigne, Michel de, on friendship, 8, 38, on honesty and utility, 50–1 n148
Montesquieu, Charles Secondat, 2nd Baron de, on civil and political liberty, 131–3;
on commerce, 121; on English constitution, 163; exploration as new epoch in history, 199; on
'independence', 361
Morford, Mark, 21 n1
Muret, Marc-Antoine, lectures on Cicero, 21–3
- national identity, 15–16
preservation, 9, 21, 33, 64
natural law, 24, 40
natural law (modern), Blackstone on, 136–7, 244–6; difference between Clarke's metaphysical theory and natural jurisprudence, 298; on empire, 220; Grotius, 59–65; lacuna in study of eighteenth-century British, 142 n219; Pufendorf on, 66–72; Rutherford on,
142–9; as transformation of Stoic–sceptic political thought, 268; as translation of reason of state, 11 natural rights, 19; and theory of 'actual' representation, 261–4; use in eighteenth-century political thought, 351–2
Naudé, Gabriel preeminence of public utility, 39 n88; prudence and coup d'état, 57–8
necessitas non habet legem, 9 necessity, and 'the ambassador', 55–6; a double-edged sword, 85, 102;
economic, 152; Hume on, 125; as

- necessity (cont.)
parent of moral reformation, 110; as patriotic, 90; seen as a threat to justice by Kant, 418; and self-preservation, 9–10, 27, 42–9; see also common good, Cicero, reason of state, security, utility, public good
- Nedham, Marchmont on ‘good’ and ‘bad’ reason of state, 54 n161; ‘interest’, 37 n78
- neo-Stoic(ism) and early modern patriotism, 9, 22 n2, 38; interpreted by Tunstall, 140–1
- Netherlands, The, 4
- Newton, Benjamin, on political economy, 133
- nonconformist (Protestants), 17; political ideology, 267–8
- obedience, 50
- obligation, as political problem, 12;
skepticism a challenge to, 59
- Oestreich, Gerhard, 8 n13
- Olivares, Count, Duke of (Gaspar de Guzmán), 8 n13, 30
- opera, 11; as threat to manners, 108
- Opposition, in British politics, 18
- Otis, James, on imperial political economy, 194 n213; on Pownall, 211; on representation and natural rights, 259, 262–3
- Oxenstierna, Axel, 31, 31 n45
- Pagden, Anthony on empire in modern
natural law, 220
- Paley, William, critic of Clarke, 397–8
- Panaetius, 25
- Pares, Richard, 172 n97
- Parker, Henry, on salus populi and necessity 47–50
- parliament, 19, 48
- parliamentary reform (movement), 18, 20;
Burgh on, 357–9; Cartwright’s contribution to newer argument, 368–73; corruption, 109; older arguments for, 365–8
- Parsons, Robert, 39 n89
- party, 18; and common good, 96–8; as locus for clash of utility and right, 88–89; and patriotism, 96
- patriotism, and eighteenth-century party politics, 92–102; neo-Stoicism, 9, 18, 38; opposed to political liberty, 123–4
- Perceval, John, 96–8
- Peters, Marie, 98
- Phillipson, Nicholas, 38
- Pincus, Steve, 73 n236, 152 n6–7
- Pitt, William, imperial political economy, 173–7; likened to Cicero, 94; policy shifts defended as patriotic, 99–101; rise to power, 98
- Pocock, J. G. A., 3
- police, 35
- political economy, component of statecraft, 30–3, 151–3; Davenant on foundation of British state, 155–6; early modern principles, 154–5
- politics, 1–2, 28; science of, 18, 118–20, as eighteenth-century ‘translation’ of reason of state, 117–19; as improvement on humanist use of history, 119–20; a means of arresting flux, 117
- Polybius, as anthropologist of constitutional change, 118; contrasted with Tacitus, 104–5; model for Universal History, 188–9; theory of constitutional decay rejected by reformers, 259, 364
- Portugal, 14
- Postlethwayt, Malachi, on innovation, 113;
on political economy of empire, 163–9
- Poussin, Nicolas, 140
- Pownall, John, 181
- Pownall, Thomas, on Adam Smith, 205 n261, 210 n280; background, 202–3; on basis of political obligation, 203–4; on Britain’s post Seven Years War empire, 211–13; on claim to empire, 220–1; on contract mechanism, 204–6; federal option, 238; idea of liberty related to that of Price, 235; on ‘interest’ as political ‘spirit’, 208–9; law of supply and demand, 401; on natural limit of community, 206–8; on provincial government, 236
- prerogative Locke on, 78; and reason of state, 44–7
- preservation (of state), 29–31, 34–5, 43–4, 51, 53–4
- Price, Richard, on claim to empire, 219;
Clarkean notion of private judgment in religion and politics attacked, 386–92; context for origin of utilitarianism, 392–3; distinction between ‘empire’ and ‘kingdom’ and responses of critics, 381–5; individual liberty, 293–5; interpreter of ‘common’ good, 290–2; interpreter of Samuel Clarke, 289–95; on liberty, 374–5; Lind and Bentham criticizing his notion of liberty, law, equality and rights, 385, 394–7; on link between domestic and international order, 415; natural rights and imperial

Cambridge University Press
052161712X - Defining the Common Good: Empire, Religion and Philosophy in Eighteenth-Century Britain

Peter N. Miller

Index

More information

- reform, 380–1; notion of equality and representation challenged by critics, 385; notion of ‘slavery’, 375;
Observations on the Nature of Civil Liberty. . . 373–4; position on concept of liberty compared with Priestley, 376–9; position on distinguished from Locke’s, 389–90; from Priestley’s, 391
- Priestley, Joseph, on Blackstone and Warburton, 304, 328–9; on civil liberty, 134; on dissenters’ support of civil liberty, 319–20; distinguishes his position from Locke’s, 345–7; on establishments, 307; and Grotius, 261; history shows value of free inquiry, 325, 341–3; ideal of a civil right, 261–2; liberty of thought, 323–4, 330–1; limited civil authority in spirituals, 318; on political economy of empire, 166, 404; political society, 338, 344–5, 347–8; position on concept of liberty compared with Price, 376–9; rejection of Brown by rejecting his favoring of Sparta over Athens, 338–9; reorientation of political thought, 340–1, 343–4; on virtual representation, 257
- Protestant, 6, 7
- provincial government as threat to liberty, 236–9
- prudence and skeptical politics, 4, 21–2, 41, 48, 52, 54, 56
- public, 6; non-republican connotation, 83
- public credit, 153, 174–5
- public good, basis of eighteenth-century British political discourse, 102; foundation of morality, 140–1; justifies deception according to Gordon, 93–4; mocked by Mandeville, 86; as measure of true patriotism, 93–5; see also common good, reason of state, utility.
- public safety, 24
- public tranquillity, 23
- Public utility, 398–9; defense of toleration, 320, 398
- public welfare, 23, 37
- Pufendorf, Samuel von, 15, on Carneades, 68, on Ciceronian statecraft, 68–72; attacking Hobbes and Cicero, 267; natural law, 65–72; on self-preservation, 67; on Swedish war aims, 66 n208–9; on utility, 68–9
- Pyrrhonism as pure utility, 59
- ‘Realm Question’ described, 224–5; implications for liberty, 229–30; implications for notion of public good, 231; implications for notion of representation, 232–3, 240; implications for relationship between individual and communal liberty, 234–5; and origin of colonies, 227–8; Pownall on, 225–238; and sovereignty, 226, 229; and taxation, 239–40
- reason of state (raison d’état; ragione di stato, razón de estado) and ‘ambassador’, 49–50, 55–6; and Ciceronian public utility, 50–52, 56–9; and crisis of mixed constitutions, 30–1; and English civil war, 47–8; and Grotius’ political thought, 60–5; and ‘interest’, 38–9; interpreted by Hoadly as compatible with constitutional authority, 86–7; Kant as the ‘end-point’ of this tradition, 419; and Locke, 128 n162; and ‘necessity’, 42–4; and ‘political economy’, 32–34; and political economy of empire, 151–6; and ‘preservation’, 29–30, 153; and ‘public good’ or ‘utility’, 35–7; and Pufendorf’s political thought, 67–72; and Pyrrhonism, 59; and representation, 245, 254, 262–3; and ‘salus populi’, 39–42; as self-preservation, 153; in Ship Money Trial, 43–7; sixteenth century, 4–5; and ‘state religion’, 34–5; in Swedish Thirty Years War policy, 31–2; and toleration, 267, 291–2, 299–306, 315
- Reformation, dissenting histories of, 322, and politics, 1, 6, 14
- religion, 1; supports good manners, 112, 158
- religious diversity, and political disunion, 13, 17, 29, 35, 51
- of state, 28, 34; defended by Blackstone, 304–5; defended in terms of state security, 299–306; used by Sacheverell to uphold security, 83–4
- toleration in eighteenth-century Britain, 296–9; Barbeyrac on, 298 n122; of Catholics, 321–2; defended by Hume and Smith, 320; grounded on nature of civil government, 317–19, 323–4; Ibbot on, 316–7; Locke’s argument for, 314–6; grounded on a natural right to private judgment, 324–32; private judgment as a threat to national security, 306–8 in Quebec as politique policy, 306; Watts on, 317; uniformity and reason of state, 14
- Renaissance, 3, 4
- representation, 43; Blackstone on, 244–7; Hobbes on, 241–2; Lawson on, 242–3; Locke on, 244

- representation (cont.)
 virtual theory of, 19; definition of 'virtual', 249–50; government use of, 248–55; Halifax's use of vertual, 242 n138; Lawson's use of 'vertual', 242; Parker's use of vertual, 242 n138; virtual representation and sovereignty, 251–2; and implied notion of 'rights', 253–4; incompatible with natural equality, 254–5; rejected by the Americans, 255–8
 'actual' representation and common good, 257–8; Hulme on, 259–60; limits possible claim of necessity, 264; natural right to judge in politics similar to religion, 262; reopens Realm Question, 258; and republican participation, 261; and sovereignty, 259; new theory of challenges foundation of imperial political economy, 263–4; underpinned by new notion of natural rights, 262–4
- republicanism, Roman, 3; Italian, 4; mocking of ancient in eighteenth century, 119–20
- republics, 37
- reputación*, 33
- resistance, justified by public good, by Gordon, 83; by Jackson, 82; justified as self-preservation, 79–83; rejected by Sacheverell, 83–5
- Revolution of, 1688, 13; eighteenth-century fortuna, 88; interpreted in terms of public good, 79; and problem of legitimate necessity, 85
- Reynolds, William, 39–40
- Richelieu, Cardinal, likened to Cicero, 90; policy, 39, 43, 58 n175; and religious toleration, 34
- Rivadeneira, Pedro de denunciation of políticos, 30; on the good life, 9; on prudence, 53–4; rejection of civic religion, 50
- Robbins, Caroline, 3, 195
- Roberts, Michael, 31
- Robertson, John, 216 n2
- Robertson, Neil, 361 n51
- Robinson, Robert, 317, 325–6
- Rohan, Duke of, on interest, 37–8, 119
- Rome, images of, 19
- Rotheram, John, 303
- Russell, Conrad, on England as composite state, 12–13, 24, 26, 30, 44
- Rutherford, Thomas, on Cicero as a middle stoic, 145–6; on Samuel Clarke, 144; distinction between natural and civil liberty, 147–8; on Grotius, 142–9; on Grotius' discussion of provincial government, 237–8; on resistance, 148; on sociability, 143
- Saavedra Fajardo, Diego de, and friendship, 37; political economy, 32–3
- Sacheverell, Henry, 83–5
- safety and security of state, 28, 40–5, 56
- Sallust, 53, 58
- Salmon, J. H. M., 21 n1, 38 n83
- salus patriae*, 23, 32
- salus populi suprema lex esto*, in justifications of Revolution of, 1688, 80; invoked by Hume, 126; use by Kant, 420–1; use by Otis, 262–3; in reason of state, 39–42; in Ship Money Trial, 43–7; use by Pufendorf, 48, 58, 67, 71; use in Restoration England, 74–5; use by Trimmers, 75–6; see Cicero, Common Good, Necessity, Reason of State
- salus reipublicae*, 27
- Sancroft, William, 34
- Savile, George (Lord Halifax), 75, 89 n2
- Saxons, in political thought, 259–61
- scepticism, 4, 8; confronted by Grotius, 63–4
- Schmoller, Gustav, 4
- Scotland, Scottish, 14,
- security, according to Cicero, 23–4, 28; as an aim of politics, 9, 32, 36, 41, 54; criticism of, 17; as goal of empire, 177–8; measure of patriotism according to Egmont, 98; threatened by public debt, 125; threatened by Trimmers according to Sacheverell, 84
- self-preservation and classical political thought, 3, 21, 24, 33, 59, 61 depends on social life, 64; enhanced by colonization, 157; justifies resistance, 79–83
- Seneca, 2, 54,
- Seven Years War, 19; aims defined in terms of national interest, 175–7; challenge to content of imperial political economy, 179–85; as securing national goals, 177–9; as turning point in history and imperial theory, 170–1; in British history, 179
- Shaftesbury, Lord (Anthony Ashley Cooper), 85, 285
- Sharp, Granville, need for reformed representation, 356
- Sherman, Bill, 22 n2
- Ship Money Trial, 43–7
- Shklar, Judith, 187 n174
- Sicily, 14

Cambridge University Press
052161712X - Defining the Common Good: Empire, Religion and Philosophy in Eighteenth-Century Britain

Peter N. Miller

Index

More information

Index

471

- Sidney, Algernon, neo-Stoicism and statecraft, 76–7
- Silhon, Jean de, 50, 59
- Sirmond, Jean de, 39 n84
- Skinner, Quentin, 2, 3 n5, 102 n56
- Smith, Adam, comparing British and Greek colonies, 404–5; on difference between opera seria and buffa, 108 n77; on global exploration, 179; impartial spectator as Stoic wise man, 91 n9; natural liberty of commerce underpinning reformed ‘natural’ politics, 410–12; on political economy of empire, 162, 402–4; tasks of rulers in reformed states defined, 412; on toleration, 320
- Smollett, Tobias on political economy of empire, 175–7
- sociability, 38, invoked by Grotius against Carneades, 63; Rutherford on, 143
- social contract and reason of state, 11
- Sommerville, Johann, 42 n100, 43, 43 n108, 44 n109
- sovereignty, early modern history of, 12; in composite states, 31; and reason of state, 41–6
- Spain, Spanish arbitristas, 32
- empire, 14
- neo-Stoics, 8
- politics, 31
- Sparta, constitution favorably contrasted with Britain’s, 114, 120; exemplar of stable government, 113
- Spectator*, The, 85
- state and necessity, 48–9, 57–9; and imperial rule, 14–15; and sovereignty, 12
- post-Reformation (early modern) state challenged by problematic imperial community, 414; and common good, 8, 15–17, 28–9, 51, 54; Kant’s rejection of its principles, 419–21; principles defined, 413
- statecraft, Halifax on, 75; Locke on, 77–8; and political economy, 122–3, 126–7, 133; and reason of state, 4, 22, in Restoration in England, 73, Sidney on, 76–7
- statesman, proliferation of, 27 n31; contrasted with lawyer, 48, 59
- Stoa, old, 24
- middle, 24–6; Cicero as interpreted by Middleton, 90–1; by Rutherford, 145–6; by Tunstall, 141
- Stoic, use by Grotius, 62
- Stowe, political garden at, 159 n39.
- Sweden, political thought in Thirty Years War, 31, 43, 65
- Tacitus contrasted with Cicero, 21–2, 51–2, 57
- Tacitism, 13–15, 21–2 n2; use in, eighteenth-century Britain, 104–5
- Temple, Richard, 75–6, 179
- Theveneau, Jean, 56, 57
- Tory, ‘City Toryism’, 98
- Trent, Council of, Tridentine, 6
- Tuck, Richard, on empire in modern natural law, 4, 38, 43 n107 220; on Grotius, 60 n184
- Tucker, Josiah, commerce of goods and commerce of ideas, 405–7; critic of Burke’s theory of empire, 185; critic of commercial warfare, 400; critic of monopolies, 401; attack on Locke for blurring distinction between civil and religious spheres, 407–8; rebutted by Joseph Towers, 409 n205; rejection of private judgment and parliamentary reform, 408–9; on religious uniformity, 301
- Tully, James on Locke, 128, 136 n194, 313–4; on Pufendorf, 66–8
- Tunstall, James, on Carneades, 139, analysis of Ciceronian utility, 138–42
- tyranny, tyrannicide, 22–3, 40
- union, 59
- Union of 1707 (with Scotland) as composite state, 14, 88; parallel to imperial policy, 214
- utilitarianism context of origin, 392–3; defined by J. H. Burns, 137; by J. R. Dinwiddy, 138; eighteenth-century Ciceronian content of, 137–8
- utilitas*, utile, util, and Cicero’s political thought, 24–7; in Grotius, 60–3; in Pufendorf, 68–71; in reason of state political thought, 6–7, 18, 28, 51–2, 55–9
- utility, public and community, 15
- Venice, Venetian, 6
- academies, 38
- Vera y Figueroa, Juan de, on ambassadors and reason of state, 49, 53–6, 59
- virtue, 28, 59
- Walpole, Robert, as Ciceronian patriot minister, 89–90
- war, 23
- cost of, 12, 30, 32; danger of financing by credit, 174–5

Cambridge University Press
 052161712X - Defining the Common Good: Empire, Religion and Philosophy in Eighteenth-Century Britain

Peter N. Miller

Index

More information

472

Index

- War of American Independence, 12, 20;
 debate over causes, 170–1, 171 n93–95
- Warburton, William, defense of state religion in terms of public utility, 300–3
- Watts, Isaac, 316
- welfare, 23, 34, 49, 51
- West, Benjamin, 140
- Whately, Thomas, theory of virtual
 representation, 248–9
- White, Thomas, 36 n73, 39, 49
- Wollaston, William, on Samuel Clarke, 286–7
- Wood, Gordon, 3 n4, 16,
- Wootton, David, 128 n162
- Wyvill, Christopher, 326