

Contents

Preface	page vii
Introduction	1
I. COMPULSION AND THE WILL: THREE ANCIENT TRADITIONS	13
1 The Aristotelian tradition	15
1.1 Aristotle on compulsion and the voluntary	15
1.2 The early tradition to Grosseteste	21
1.3 Scholastic commentaries	26
2 The Roman law tradition	30
2.1 The legal approach	30
2.2 The Corpus Iuris Civilis and its sources	32
2.3 The medieval Romanists	38
3 The Augustinian tradition	43
3.1 St. Augustine on compulsion, the will, and sin	43
3.2 Gratian and the canonists	46
3.3 Peter Lombard and the theologians	51
II. NEED AS COMPULSION: THE SCHOLASTIC PARADIGM	57
4 Loans and usury	59
4.1 Usury as robbery	59
4.2 The argument from compulsion	62
4.3 Is paying usury a sin?	66
4.4 The question of ownership	69
4.5 The breakdown of scholastic doctrine	74
5 Price and market manipulation	77
5.1 Value as power	77
5.2 The role of the market	82
5.3 Speculation	88
5.4 Price discrimination and collusion	91
5.5 Monopoly	94
6 Need and the will in buying and selling	100
6.1 The principle of mutual benefit	100

vi	Contents
	6.2 Need and the will: the buyer	105
	6.3 Need and the will: the seller	109
	6.4 The paradigm abandoned	112
7	Labor and wages	118
	7.1 Scholastic approaches to labor	118
	7.2 Labor and value: commerce	122
	7.3 Labor and value: crafts and professions	128
	7.4 Wages and the will of the laborer	132
	III. REJECTION AND REVIVAL IN POSTSCHOLASTIC THOUGHT	137
8	Hobbes: the antithesis	139
	8.1 Hobbes against “School-divinity”	139
	8.2 Necessitation, compulsion, and the will	140
	8.3 Justice	144
	8.4 A blueprint of laissez-faire ?	148
	8.5 The role of charity	153
9	The economics of natural law	158
	9.1 Natural law	158
	9.2 Economic laws	161
	9.3 Natural rights	164
	9.4 Compulsion in the natural rights tradition	170
	9.5 Natural liberty	174
10	The neoclassical system and its critics	178
	10.1 The case of labor	178
	10.2 Transactions and rights	182
	10.3 Economic coercion	187
	10.4 Aspects of liberty	192
	10.5 An ethical legacy	198
	Bibliography	201
	Index	213