Acknowledgments

The essays in this volume were originally prepared for a conference entitled “Duty, Interest, and Practical Reason: Aristotle, Kant, and the Stoics,” held at the University of Pittsburgh in March 1994 under the auspices of the Joint Program in Classics, Philosophy, and Ancient Science. We thank all of those, in addition to the authors, who contributed to the success of the conference. We are especially grateful to the National Endowment for the Humanities, an independent federal agency, and the Department of Philosophy at the University of Pittsburgh for generous financial assistance. We also thank the Department of Classics and the Department of the History and Philosophy of Science for their support. Peter Koehler, dean of our Faculty of Arts and Sciences, deserves special mention for covering our last-minute deficit.

Other institutions also gave their support. We thank those who agreed to serve as session chairs and the universities that provided funds for them to attend: Nancy Sherman and Henry Richardson of Georgetown University; Andrews Reath of North Carolina State University; Thomas Hill, Jr., of the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill; and Brad Inwood of the University of Toronto. We are also grateful to Terence Moore of Cambridge University Press for his support from the very start, as well as to the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences for secretarial and other assistance provided (with support from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation) while we were completing this volume.

Finally, we thank our colleagues and, above all, our graduate students for all of their assistance – from the intellectual stimulation they provided in our year-long seminar on Aristotle and Kant to their willingness to house visitors and provide transportation for the speakers to and from the airport. We are most grateful to Thomas Berry for his assistance in all phases of the project – from preparing the grant application and designing the brochures to taking care of every last detail before, during, and after the conference. We could not have done it without him.
