

Contents

List of figures	page x
List of tables	xi
Preface	xiii
1 Commonsense beliefs and psychological research strategies	1
Commonsense beliefs	1
Commonsense influences on psychological research	6
Scientific research and commonsense beliefs	6
Similarities and differences	8
The nature of explanations	12
Research strategies	14
Nomothetic versus ideographic approaches	14
Levels of explanation	15
Sex or gender?	17
Further reading	18
2 Stereotypes, attitudes, and personal attributes	19
Introduction	19
The content of gender stereotypes	20
Stereotypes and roles	23
Do stereotypes reflect prejudice or reality?	26
Attitudes towards women and men	28
Individual differences in stereotypic traits	31
Gender schema	33
Masculinity and femininity	35
Conclusions	37
Further reading	38
3 Origins	39
Introduction	39
The origins of sexual reproduction	40
Why two sexes?	42
Sexual dimorphism and sexual selection	43
The sexual natures of men and women	46

vi	Contents
	Sexual selection and psychological sex differences	48
	The hunter–gatherer way of life	51
	Gender roles	52
	The origin of patriarchy	54
	Conclusions	56
	Further reading	57
	4 Developmental influences	59
	Introduction	59
	Socialisation: the information potentially transmitted to boys and girls	60
	Routes of cultural transmission	60
	Parents' responses to infants	60
	Parents' treatment of boys and girls	61
	The social environment outside the family	63
	Socialisation: transmission through social learning	64
	Imitation of role models	64
	The learning of gender-appropriate behaviour	65
	Socialisation: acquisition through cognitive processes	66
	Gender identity	66
	Gender constancy and stability	67
	Cues for identifying sex	69
	Socialisation from a cognitive developmental perspective	70
	Does biological development influence behaviour?	71
	General issues	71
	The role of sex hormones in development	72
	Rough-and-tumble play	73
	Activity levels	74
	A biosocial approach to gender development	75
	Sex-segregation in childhood	77
	Sex-segregated groups as the context for socialisation influences	79
	The boundaries of childhood gender roles	80
	Conclusions: why socialisation and biology are not independent of one another	81
	Further reading	83
	5 Sexuality: psychophysiology, psychoanalysis, and social construction	84
	Introduction	84
	The physiological measurement of sexual behaviour	85
	The human orgasm	85
	Sources of sexual satisfaction	88
	Recording and reporting physiological arousal	90
	Questionnaire reports of sexual experience	91

	Contents	vii
Psychoanalytic explanations of sexuality	92
The unconscious	93
Psychosexual development	94
The social construction of sexuality	100
In the beginning there was man	100
From two to many	101
The xanith of Oman: a third gender role?	102
Native North American genders	103
Beyond two gender roles	105
Conclusions	107
Further reading	107
6 Aggression, violence, and power	109
Introduction	109
Aggression and violence between members of the same sex	110
Are men really more aggressive than women?	110
Which men are likely to be violent?	112
Women's aggression	114
Why is there a sex difference in same-sex violence?	116
Masculine values and their evolutionary underpinning	116
The proximate cause of male aggression and violence: is testosterone involved?	119
Socialisation explanations of men's aggression	121
Women's aggression from an evolutionary perspective	122
Violence in heterosexual relationships	123
Sexual aggression	126
Power, aggression, and violence	130
Conclusions	133
Further reading	133
7 Fear, anxiety, and mental health	135
Introduction	135
Do women experience more negative emotions?	135
Do women's emotions fluctuate more than those of men?	137
Are there sex differences in mental health?	143
Diagnosing mental disorders	143
Sex differences in specific disorders	147
Mood disorders	147
Anxiety disorders	149
Schizophrenia and other psychotic disorders	151
Eating disorders	151
Substance-related disorders	152
Personality disorders	152

viii	Contents
	How are sex differences explained?	153
	Conclusions	158
	Further reading	159
	8 The domestic sphere	160
	Introduction	160
	The family and marriage	162
	The changing family	163
	Women and marriage	164
	The family in history	167
	Mothering and attachment	170
	Attachment theory	170
	Gender-related issues in the development of attachment bonds: caregivers	172
	Gender issues in the development of attachment bonds: infants and children	174
	Developmental hazards	174
	Attachment and social development	176
	Fathers and mothers	177
	One-parent families	177
	Mothers' reports of fathers' caregiving	179
	Personality differences among fathers	180
	Conclusions	181
	Further reading	181
	9 Work, education, and occupational achievement	182
	Introduction	182
	Do men get better jobs and earn more money than women?	182
	Are there more men with high intellectual ability?	185
	Specific cognitive abilities	188
	Gender stereotypes in occupations and training	191
	Male chauvinism or masculine chauvinism?	192
	Does sex bias operate in occupational decisions?	194
	Self-stereotyping	201
	Social dominance orientation	203
	Conclusions	205
	Further reading	206
	10 Looking back and looking ahead	207
	Introduction	207
	The limitations of existing meta-analyses	208
	Age range	208
	National and cultural representation	210
	Historical context	213

Cambridge University Press
978-0-521-63533-2 - Sex and Gender, Second Edition
John Archer and Barbara Lloyd
Table of Contents
More information

---

	Contents	ix
Major theoretical developments	215
Beyond sex differences	218
Postscript	223
Further reading	223
References	225
Index	268	