

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-63752-7 - Self-Determination of Peoples: A Legal Reappraisal

Antonio Cassese

Table of Contents

More informationContents

Preface	page xv
List of abbreviations	xvii
1 Introduction	1
The significance of self-determination	1
The approach chosen	2
The principal postulates of this enquiry	3

PART I
THE HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

2 Self-determination as an international political postulate	11
The French Revolution	11
Lenin and Wilson	14
Lenin	14
Wilson	19
The aftermath of the First World War	23
The Aaland Islands case	27
Concluding remarks	32

Contents

PART II
SELF-DETERMINATION BECOMES AN INTERNATIONAL LEGAL STANDARD

3 Treaty law	37
The United Nations Charter	37
Political attitudes in the era after the Second World War	44
The 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights	47
Introductory remarks	47
The origin of the Article on self-determination	48
The content of self-determination as laid down in the Covenants	52
Self-determination as a continuing right: expression of popular will	52
Self-determination as a continuing right: freedom from outside interference	55
The right over natural wealth and resources	55
Self-determination of dependent peoples	57
The people referred to in Article 1	59
The practice of the UN Human Rights Committee	62
Concluding comments	65
 4 The emergence of customary rules: external self-determination	 67
Introductory remarks: two necessary caveats	67
The role of treaty rules in the customary process	67
The role of UN Resolutions in the crystallization of customary rules	69
External self-determination	71
The self-determination of colonial peoples	71
The evolving of general standards	71
The actual implementation of the standards	74
An overview of UN practice with regard to colonial situations	74
To what extent has the United Nations paid regard to the freely expressed will of colonial peoples?	76
Cases where the principle of self-determination was blatantly set aside	79
Three outstanding situations	86
The pronouncements of the International Court of Justice	88
The self-determination of peoples subjected to foreign domination or occupation	90
Economic self-determination	99

Contents

5 The emergence of customary rules: internal self-determination	101
Introductory remarks	101
A right of self-determination for the populations of sovereign states? The UN practice	102
The right to self-determination of racial groups denied equal access to government	108
The 1970 Declaration on Friendly Relations: its saving clause	109
The literal and logical construction of the clause	112
The preparatory work bears out the above interpretation	115
Does the Declaration enshrine a right of secession for racial and religious groups?	118
The saving clause of the 1970: Declaration: is it customary law?	120
General	120
In particular: the refusal of any right to secession	122
The modes of exercising internal self-determination	124
Conclusion: the general principle and the customary rules on self-determination	126
The different role of the principle and the rules	126
Self-determination as imposing obligations towards the whole international community as part of jus cogens	133
6 The holders of the right to self-determination and the means of ensuring observance of the right	141
Introductory remarks	141
The recipients of the right to self-determination under the UN Covenants: two possible views	141
The view according to which peoples are only beneficiaries of Article 1	142
The view according to which peoples are holders of legal rights proper	143
Means of ensuring respect for the right to self-determination under the Covenants	145
The recipients of the right to self-determination under customary law	146
The manner of exercising self-determination under customary law	147

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-63752-7 - Self-Determination of Peoples: A Legal Reappraisal

Antonio Cassese

Table of Contents

More information

Contents

Enforcement of self-determination by the peoples concerned	150
Enforcement of self-determination by third states	155
7 Comparing customary law and treaty law	159

PART III
THE RIGHT TO SELF-DETERMINATION IN OPERATION

8 The impact of self-determination on traditional international law	165
Introductory remarks	165
International legal subjects	165
Sources of law: the rise of jus cogens	169
The principle of non-interference in domestic affairs	174
State responsibility	176
The changing paradigm of state responsibility	176
‘Crimes of States’ in the International Law Commission’s Draft Convention on State Responsibility	177
State responses to gross breaches of the principle of self-determination	180
Territorial sovereignty	185
Introductory remarks	185
The validity of existing title over territory	186
Acquisition of legal title to territorial sovereignty	188
Cession	189
Boundaries (uti possidetis v. self-determination)	190
The use of force	193
The use of force by the oppressive state	194
The use of force by the oppressed people	197
The use of force by third states	199
Resort to force by the state claiming reversionary rights over the territory of a dependent people	199
Resort to force by other third states	199
Final remarks	200
The humanitarian law of armed conflict	201

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-63752-7 - Self-Determination of Peoples: A Legal Reappraisal

Antonio Cassese

Table of Contents

More information

Contents

9 Testing international law – some particularly controversial issues	205
Introductory remarks	205
Attempts at implementing self-determination: some case studies	206
Gibraltar	206
General	206
Historical background	207
The position of Spain	208
The position of the UK	209
The position of the UN	210
Some tentative remarks	211
Western Sahara	214
Introductory remarks	214
Historical background	214
A thumb-nail sketch of the position of the states concerned	217
Concluding remarks	218
Eritrea	218
Introductory remarks	218
Historical background	219
The views and claims of Ethiopia	221
The views and claims of the Eritreans	221
Concluding remarks	222
East Timor	223
Introductory remarks	223
Historical background	224
The views of Portugal	225
The views of Indonesia	225
Some tentative remarks	226
Palestinian rights	230
Introductory remarks	230
Historical background	232
The view advanced by the government of Israel	235
The view advanced by the Palestine Liberation Organization	237
The position of the United Nations	238
A few general remarks	240
The Israel–PLO agreement of 13 September 1993: some tentative observations	243
The Agreement and self-determination	243

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-63752-7 - Self-Determination of Peoples: A Legal Reappraisal

Antonio Cassese

Table of Contents

More information

Contents

The Agreement and the Camp David Accord	245
Concluding remarks	247
Quebec	248
Historical background	248
The positions advanced by the principal political parties in Quebec	251
The view advanced by the federal government	251
Do the Québécois have a legal right to self-determination?	251
Rights versus reality	253
Concluding comments	254
10 The role of self-determination in the recent break up of the Soviet Union and Yugoslavia	257
Introductory remarks	257
The Baltic republics	258
The position of the republics	258
The position advanced by the Soviet Union	261
The rights of the Baltic republics under international law	262
Rights versus reality	263
The other Soviet Republics	264
The crisis in Yugoslavia	268
Concluding remarks	273
PART IV
THE NEW TRENDS EMERGING IN THE WORLD COMMUNITY
11 Attempts at expanding self-determination	277
Introduction	277
The Helsinki Final Act	278
General	278
The 1973 proposals	280
The texts of the four proposals	280
The discussion of the texts	283
Principle VIII of the Helsinki decalogue	284
The novel features of Principle VIII	285
The traditional facets of Principle VIII	288
The Helsinki Principle, the UN instruments and customary international law	290

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-63752-7 - Self-Determination of Peoples: A Legal Reappraisal

Antonio Cassese

Table of Contents

More information

Contents

The CSCE follow-up to the Helsinki Final Act	292
The 1976 Algiers Declaration on the Rights of Peoples	296
The main features of the self-determination provisions	296
The Algiers Declaration and existing international law	301
The Algiers Declaration and the Helsinki Final Act	301
The new drive towards the customary recognition of the right to self-determination of the peoples of sovereign states	302

PART V

GENERAL STOCK-TAKING

12 Recapitulation and conclusion	315
Merits and failings of the present body of international law	315
The political principle and its different meanings	315
What notion of self-determination has been upheld in international law? The present legal regulation of self-determination	317
The historical and political background of the present international regulation of self-determination	320
Merits of the present law	323
The alleged flaws of the law	325
The real flaws	327
The co-ordination of self-determination with the other fundamental legal principles of the world community	333
Emerging normative trends	337
The existing law on self-determination and the new tribalism	339
From lex lata to lex ferenda : a blueprint for action	341
The starting point	341
The failings of UN action	341
The current context of the international community	342
A plea for a four-pronged strategy	344
Putting existing international legislation into effect with regard to some outstanding questions	344
Promoting the crystallization of rules in statu nascendi on the internal self-determination of peoples of sovereign states	346
Developing new rules for the internal self-determination of ethnic groups and minorities	348
General: the need to rethink self-determination and emphasize its 'internal' dimension	348

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-63752-7 - Self-Determination of Peoples: A Legal Reappraisal

Antonio Cassese

Table of Contents

More information

Contents

Looking upon minority protection within the framework of internal self-determination: the link between the two concepts	351
The means of achieving self-determination for ethnic groups and minorities: strengthening positive action and participatory rights and granting a wide measure of autonomy	352
Allowing for the exceptional granting of external self-determination to ethnic groups and minorities, subject to international consent and scrutiny	359
A word of caution about the proposed strategy and some alternative solutions	363
Index of names	366
Index of subjects	372