Accounts of the “historical avant-garde” and of “high modernism” often celebrate the former for its revolutionary aesthetics or denigrate the latter for its “proto-fascist” politics. In Literature, Politics, and the English Avant-Garde, Paul Peppis shows how neither interpretation explains the writings of avant-gardists in early twentieth-century England. Peppis reads texts by writers like Ford Madox Ford, Wyndham Lewis, Dora Marsden, and Ezra Pound alongside English political discourse between the death of Victoria and the end of the Great War. He traces the impact of nation and empire on the avant-garde, arguing that Vorticism, England’s foremost avant-garde movement, used nationalism to advance literature and avant-garde literature to advance empire. Peppis’s study demonstrates that these ambitions were enabled by the period’s conception of nationality as an essence and construct. By recovering these neglected aspects of avant-garde politics, Peppis’s book opens important new avenues for assessing modernist politics after the war.

Paul Peppis is Assistant Professor of English at the University of Oregon. He has written a range of articles and reviews on modernist authors, modernist theories of race, and modernism and the Great War, in journals such as Modernism/Modernity, Modern Philology, Twentieth-Century Literature, and the Yale Journal of Criticism.
LITERATURE, POLITICS, AND THE ENGLISH AVANT-GARDE

Nation and Empire, 1901–1918

PAUL PEPPIS
For Tess, Cole, and Libby
Contents

List of illustrations  page viii
Acknowledgments  ix

Introduction  Nations, empires, and the historical avant-garde  1
1 Conjuring new character: The English Review, Wyndham Lewis, and the reconstruction of Englishness  20
2 Narratives of ambition and anxiety: confronting Europe in The New Age  53
3 Advancing art and empire: Futurism in England, Italy in Libya, and the founding of Vorticism  76
4 “Surrounded by a multitude of other Blasts”: Vorticism and the Great War  96
5 Anti-Individualism and fictions of national character in Lewis’s Tarr  133

Conclusion  162
Notes  166
Bibliography  208
Index  225
Illustrations

1 Wyndham Lewis, Before Antwerp, BLAST II (July 1915), cover; (c) the Estate of Mrs. G. A. Wyndham Lewis. By permission. page 100

3 George Morrow, “How the Cubist . . .,” Punch 147 (14 October 1914): 325, reproduced with permission of Punch Ltd.

4 Bernard Partridge, “The Triumph of ‘Culture,’” Punch 147 (23 August 1914): 185, reproduced with permission of Punch Ltd.

6 Bernard Partridge, “A Glorious Example,” Punch 147 (11 November 1914): 399, reproduced with permission of Punch Ltd.

9 Christopher Nevinson, On the Way to the Trenches, BLAST II (July 1915): 89; (c) the Estate of Mrs. G. A. Wyndham Lewis. By permission.

10 Jacob Kramer, Types of the Russian Army, BLAST II (July 1915): 31; (c) the Estate of Mrs. G. A. Wyndham Lewis. By permission.
Acknowledgments

In writing this book my thoughts and words have benefited from the wisdom and support of many. I wish first to thank my advisors at the University of Chicago, Robert von Hallberg and Loren Kruger, for their rigorous criticism, thoughtful advice, and generous encouragement in the early stages of the project. Other colleagues at the University of Chicago aided the evolution of my argument in myriad ways, especially Wayne Booth, Jessica Burstein, Lee Garver, David Kadlec, Mark Morrison, and members of the Avant-Garde Workshop. At the University of Oregon, Ian Duncan, Karen Ford, John Gage, Dick Stein, and Richard Stevenson provided invaluable commentary and advice as I reconceived and revised the manuscript into its current form. For assistance with research, I am grateful to the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation for a dissertation fellowship, which assisted early on; to the librarians at the Division of Rare and Manuscripts Collections of the Carl A. Kroch Library at Cornell University for guidance and aid in the Ford Madox Ford and Wyndham Lewis Collections; and to the University of Oregon for a New Faculty Research Award, which helped bring the research to completion. My thanks to my anonymous readers at Cambridge University Press, and to my editor Ray Ryan, copy-editor Rachel Coldicutt, and publishing assistant, Jenny Landor, for their consistent aid, good humor, and hard work during the process to publication. I am especially indebted to Omar S. Pound, the Estate of Wyndham Lewis, the Estate of Mrs. G. A. Wyndham Lewis, and the Wyndham Lewis Memorial Trust for their generous permission to quote from the texts of Wyndham Lewis, (c) The Wyndham Lewis Memorial Trust, a registered Trust in the United Kingdom and to reproduce graphics featured in BLAST, (c) the Estate of Mrs. G. A. Wyndham Lewis, by permission. Earlier versions of two chapters have been published previously. Chapter 4 is an expanded version of “‘Surrounded by a Multitude of other Blasts’: Vorticism and the Great War,” x

Acknowledgments

To David Thompson, heartfelt thanks for incomparable hours of comment and debate. To Alex, Anne, and Phil, much love for years of faith and support. To Susy and Jack, love and thanks for interest, openness, and generosity. My deepest gratitude and love to Tess, Cole, and, above all, my wife, Libby Wadsworth, who has, throughout this long and often arduous process, shown her characteristic good humor, common sense, and commitment. Without her faith and friendship this book would never have been conceived, much less completed.