

The Religious and the Political

While the relationships between ethics and religion, and violence and politics, are of enduring interest, the interface between religion and violence is one of the most problematic features of the contemporary world. Following in the tradition of Max Weber's historical and comparative study of religions, this book explores the many ways in which religion and politics are both combined and separated across different world religions and societies. Through a variety of case studies including the monarchy, marriage, law and conversion, Bryan S. Turner explores different manifestations of secularization, and how the separation of church and state is either compromised or abandoned. He considers how different states manage religion in culturally and religiously diverse societies and concludes with a discussion of the contemporary problems facing the liberal theory of freedom of religion. The underlying theoretical issue is the conditions for legitimacy of rule in modern societies experiencing global changes.

BRYAN S. TURNER is the Presidential Professor of Sociology and the Director of the Committee on Religion at the Graduate Center, the City University of New York, and the Director of the Centre for Religion and Society at the University of Western Sydney. He is the author of Religion and Modern Society (Cambridge, 2011) and the editor of The Cambridge Dictionary of Sociology (Cambridge, 2006).

Many chapters in this volume, especially with respect to the notion of ‘popular religion’, were first presented as working papers to the Religion Committee weekly seminars at the Graduate Center, the City University of New York. My colleagues in the Department of Sociology and the organizing group within the Religion Committee have offered a wonderful platform for testing these ideas. The debates with colleagues were invaluable. I would like to thank John Torpey and John Shean, with whom I read Robert Bellah’s Religion in human evolution in preparation for the chapters on China and Japan. Berna Zengin Arslan joined with me to write Chapter 11 while she was a post-doctoral fellow at the Graduate Center. I would also like to thank colleagues in the Centre for Religion and Society at the University of Western Sydney, especially Adam Possamai and Julia Howell, for their support. Elena Knox of the University of Western Sydney was an invaluable editor in preparing the references. My wife Nguyen Kim Hoa was my constant companion through these labours.
