DEMOCRATIC INNOVATIONS

Can we design institutions that increase and deepen citizen participation in the political decision-making process? At a time when there is growing disillusionment with the institutions of advanced industrial democracies, there is also increasing interest in new ways of involving citizens in the political decisions that affect their lives. This book draws together evidence from a variety of democratic innovations from around the world, including participatory budgeting in Brazil, Citizens' Assemblies on Electoral Reform in Canada, direct legislation in California and Switzerland and emerging experiments in e-democracy. The book offers a rare systematic analysis of this diverse range of democratic innovations, drawing lessons for the future development of both democratic theory and practice.

GRAHAM SMITH is Professor of Politics in the Centre for Citizenship, Globalisation and Governance at the University of Southampton.

Social scientists have rediscovered institutions. They have been increasingly concerned with the myriad ways in which social and political institutions shape the patterns of individual interactions which produce social phenomena. They are equally concerned with the ways in which those institutions emerge from such interactions.

This series is devoted to the exploration of the more normative aspects of these issues. What makes one set of institutions better than another? How, if at all, might we move from the less desirable set of institutions to a more desirable set? Alongside the questions of what institutions we would design, if we were designing them afresh, are pragmatic questions of how we can best get from here to there: from our present institutions to new revitalised ones.

Theories of institutional design is insistently multidisciplinary and interdisciplinary, both in the institutions on which it focuses, and in the methodologies used to study them. There are interesting sociological questions to be asked about legal institutions, interesting legal questions to be asked about economic institutions, and interesting social, economic, and legal questions to be asked about political institutions. By juxtaposing these approaches in print, this series aims to enrich normative discourse surrounding important issues of designing and redesigning, shaping and reshaping the social, political, and economic institutions of contemporary society.

Acknowledgments

This book would probably not exist if Adam Lent had not commissioned me to write a report on democratic innovations for the Power Inquiry. His perceptive promptings and suggestions helped shape the content of Beyond the Ballot. The report seemed to catch academic and policy-makers' imagination and the response convinced me that a more considered reflection on democratic innovations was timely.

My ideas have been shaped by discussions with numerous colleagues and students over the past few years, too numerous to thank. I would, however, like to express my gratitude to those individuals who have been willing to read and comment on one or more of the chapters: Chris Armstrong, Ken Carty, Archon Fung, Andrew Mason, David Owen, John Parkinson, Ben Saunders, Mike Saward, Susan Stephenson, Julien Talpin, Corinne Wales, Mark Warren and the anonymous readers from Cambridge University Press.

I wish to express my warmest thanks to Susan Stephenson and David Owen. Susan and I have shared our lives for almost two decades now and her passion – emotional, spiritual and intellectual – has been a source of great joy in my life. David is a rare colleague. He has read all of the chapters at least once – as well as chapters that were eventually ditched – and I thank him for his friendship, generosity and belief in my work.

I would like to thank my supportive department at the University of Southampton for the sabbatical that allowed me to start writing this book and the Arts and Humanities Research Council for granting me a Research Leave Award which provided a further semester of study leave. I would also like to thank Sarum College for generously providing a quiet place to hide away to write when needed and John Haslam at Cambridge

University Press for being a great editor and supporting the right football team.

Finally, I would like to dedicate this book to my parents, Alan and Olive Smith. During the writing of this book they were both taken seriously ill. I was fortunate to be on sabbatical and able to spend valuable time with them and the rest of my family during their recoveries. Thankfully they are now well again. Their health is more important to me than any manuscript.
