HUMAN DEVELOPMENT AND POLITICAL VIOLENCE

Human Development and Political Violence presents an innovative approach to research and practice with young people growing up in the context of political violence. Based on developmental theory, this book explains and illustrates how children and youth interact with environments defined by war, armed conflict, and the aftermath of displacement, poverty, political instability, and personal loss. The case study for this inquiry is a research workshop in three countries and a refugee community of the former Yugoslavia, where youth aged 12 to 27 participated in activities designed to promote their development. The theory-based Dynamic Story-Telling by Youth workshop engaged participants as social historians and critics sharing their experiences via narratives, evaluations of society, letters to public officials, debates, and collaborative inquiries. Analyses of these youth perspectives augment archival materials and researcher field notes to offer insights about developmental strategies for dealing with the threats and opportunities of war and major political change. Findings indicate that young people interact with such situations in normative ways.

Colette Daiute is Professor of Psychology and Head of the Ph.D. Program in Developmental Psychology at the Graduate Center, City University of New York. She has published widely on social development, international issues in child and youth development, uses of literacy and technology, and qualitative research methods. Her previous publications include the books Writing and Computers (1985), The Development of Literacy through Social Interaction (1993), Narrative Analysis: Studying the Development of Individuals in Society (2004, co-editor Cynthia Lightfoot), and International Perspectives on Youth Conflict and Development (2006, co-editors Zeynep Beykont, Craig Higson-Smith, and Larry Nucci). Professor Daiute has received numerous research grant awards from organizations including the United States Institute of Peace, the Spencer Foundation, the William T. Grant Foundation, the Rockefeller Foundation, the National Council of Teachers of English, Harvard University, and the U.S. government. In addition to teaching in the United States, Colette Daiute has also lectured and organized research workshops internationally, most recently at the University of Warwick (United Kingdom), Pontificia Universidade Católica do Rio de Janeiro (Brazil), the University of Zagreb (Croatia), the University of Belgrade (Serbia), and the University of Manizales (Colombia).
Human Development and Political Violence

Colette Daiute

The Graduate Center, City University of New York
For Jack
CONTENTS

List of Figures xi
List of Tables xiii
Preface xv
   Organization of the Book xix
   Acknowledgments xx

1 Beyond the Youth Gap in Understanding Political Violence 1
   How Do Young People Respond to Political Violence? 2
      The Damage Response 3
      Cycles of Violence 5
   The Need for Youth Perspectives 8
   A Developmental Analysis to Fill the Youth Gap in Research and Practice 12
   What Is Developmental about Political Violence and Transition? 14
   Case Study across a Political-Violence System 16
   Insights about Youth Perspectives in Context 23
      An “Aha” Example of Child–Society Interaction 24
   Adolescence and Political Transition 31
   Summary 33

2 Youth and Society Work Together 35
   Serbia, August 36
   Bosnia and Herzegovina, September 36
   New York, September 37
   Croatia, April and June 38
   Dynamic Story-Telling by Youth 42

vii
Contents

Development Is Collaborative Participation 43
Managing Public and Personal Life 48
Social Relations and Social Change 49
  Inquiry Genres 53
  Narrative Genres 58
Overview of the Public Story Activity 66
  Advisory Genres 67
Participants 69
Why Us? 70
Participant Evaluations 72
Summary 74

3 Living History 76
  From Oppressive History to Living History 79
  Narrating Living History 83
  Landscapes of Conflict 85
    Settings 86
    Plots 88
Youth–Society Scripts 90
  “Tensions Abound” Script 92
  “Moving Beyond Difficulties” Script 94
  “Reflecting on Societal Divisions” Script 97
Youth Reflections about the State of the State 98
Comparing Youth Perspectives to Scholars’ Analyses 103
  Youth in BiH Focus on Tensions in Uncertain Conditions 107
  Youth in Serbia Focus on Ideological Divisions 108
  Youth in Croatia Focus on Obstacles to Economic Advancement 110
Youth Refugees (Immigrants) to the United States Deal with Isolation 111
Summary 112

4 Critical Narrating 113
  Thawing Frozen Narratives 117
  Creative Uses of Cultural Genres 121
    Aesthetic Hooks for Political Expression 122
Literary Conversations 123
  Plot 124
Contents

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Part</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Emotion</td>
<td>132</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Speaking with Time</td>
<td>138</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Critical Narrating</td>
<td>144</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Summary</td>
<td>146</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>Participation Matters</td>
<td>148</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Participation and Development</td>
<td>152</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Youth Participation across Political-Violence Systems</td>
<td>155</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Participation Matters</td>
<td>157</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>How Do Youth Participate in Community Organisations?</td>
<td>159</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Youth Advice to Persons in Power</td>
<td>162</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Active Inquiry: Youth Interpretations of Surveys</td>
<td>167</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Active Inquiry: Creating an Original Youth Survey</td>
<td>169</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Debating Public Stories</td>
<td>175</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Summary: Power Genres</td>
<td>181</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>Sociobiographies</td>
<td>185</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Many Ways to Tell a War Story</td>
<td>185</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sociobiographies</td>
<td>192</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Beyond Identity</td>
<td>193</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Personal Stories in Societal Scripts</td>
<td>198</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sociobiographical Case Studies</td>
<td>200</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Variations on the “Moving Beyond Difficulties” Script in the United States</td>
<td>202</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Narea, Coping with Moving Beyond</td>
<td>202</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Other Approaches to the “Moving Beyond” Script</td>
<td>205</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Variations on the “Tensions Abound” Script</td>
<td>208</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amer-Ci, A Cheerful Voice amidst the Tension</td>
<td>208</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Other Approaches to the “Tensions Abound” Script</td>
<td>210</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Variations on the “Moving Beyond Difficulties” Script in Croatia</td>
<td>212</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anamaria, a View from the North</td>
<td>212</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Other Approaches to the “Moving Beyond Difficulties” Script</td>
<td>215</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Variations on the “Reflecting on Societal Divisions” Script</td>
<td>217</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pseudonumia, Young Politician Fighting the Past</td>
<td>217</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Contents

Other Approaches to the “Reflecting on Societal Divisions” Script ................................................................. 218
Summary: A Different Image of the Individual ........................................................................................................ 220
7 Human Development in Conflict ..................................................................................................................... 224
  What Is a Development Analysis of the Effects of Political Violence? .............................................................. 226
  Interactive Development ...................................................................................................................................... 227
  Exposure and Expressiveness ............................................................................................................................. 229
  Purposeful Mediation with Cultural Tools ........................................................................................................... 238
  Balancing Threat–Opportunity Dilemmas ........................................................................................................... 240
  Designing for Developmental Complexity and Diversity ....................................................................................... 245
  Extending to a Political Violence System in South America ............................................................................. 247
  Developmental Punch Line .................................................................................................................................... 253

Appendix: Examples of Public Stories across Positions in the DSTY Research Workshop .............................................. 257
References ................................................................................................................................................................. 261
Index ........................................................................................................................................................................ 273
LIST OF FIGURES

1.1 Caught between decay and future. page 1
1.2 Dimensions of a political-violence system for child and youth development across the former Yugoslavia. 19
1.3 Map of the former Yugoslavia and resulting Western Balkan region. 22
2.1 Youth and society work together. 35
2.2 Flyer to call for participation in the Dynamic Story-Telling by Youth research workshop. 44
2.3 Activities in the Dynamic Story-Telling by Youth research workshop and placement of results. 46
2.4 Instructions for the Dynamic Story-Telling by Youth workshop activity to review results by participants in other countries. 54
2.5 Guidelines for activity to create an original youth survey, “By and For Youth.” 57
2.6 Invitation to narrate conflict from diverse perspectives. 59
2.7 Guidelines for discussing the public story. 60
2.8 Participant evaluation for the Dynamic Story-Telling by Youth research workshop. 73
3.1 Growing up with bullet holes at the swimming hole. 76
3.2 Percentages of narratives of adult conflicts organized by different scripts. 92
4.1 Symbols of diversity in the aftermath of ethnic cleansing. 113
5.1 “Future prospects”: Are they on the horizon? 148
5.2 U.S. survey. 151
5.3 Percentages of different scripts organizing youth letters to leaders. 164
6.1 Personal variations. 185
List of Figures

6.2 Data for Narea, 16, female, United States. 203
6.3 Data for Amer-Ci, 16, male, Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH). 209
6.4 Data for Anamaria, 16, female, Croatia. 213
6.5 Data for Pseudonumia, 17, male, Serbia. 219
7.1 Supporting youth development in political violence and transition. 224
LIST OF TABLES

2.1 Discourse Genres by Youth in the Context of Political Violence and Transition page 52

3.1 Percentages of Adult-Conflict Narratives with Different Plot Structures 88

3.2 Mean Mentions per Participant in Responses to Open-Ended Questions about Problems and Positive Qualities of Local Life 101

3.3 Prospects for Youth Development after War 104

4.1 Literary Conversations with Addressivity 124

4.2 Most Common Plot Conflicts across Narrative Contexts 126

4.3 Psychological State Expressions across Narrative Contexts 134

4.4 Diverse Psychosocial Dynamic Categories and Examples 141

4.5 Percentages of Emplotments Expressing Psychosocial Interactions 142

5.1 Mean Mentions per Participant in Responses to Open-Ended Questions about Participation in Community and Other Activities 161

5.2 Results of Analysis of Original Youth Survey Questions: Issues and Pragmatics 173

5.3 Compilation of Emphases across Youth Positions 183

6.1 Case-Study Design 201

7.1 Expressiveness in Narrative Genres by Younger and Older Cohorts 232

7.2 Dimensions of Designs for Complexity and Diversity: Draft Design for Workshop with Families of Displaced Teenage Girls in Colombia, South America 249
When writing a letter to a public official, Visnja, a young woman whose life has been defined by war, echoes sentiments expressed by many other young people growing up during and after political violence across the world.

_Hmmm, hmmm, who should I write to? I am 24 years old, and for 10 years already I have problems, I live in them. Who should I talk to, and who would be open to listening to the “complaints of the youth” and take them seriously? Everyone is shaking their head for 10 years already, the old guard politicians are still shaking their heads, and they tell us ‘it will be better.’ . . . Yeah, right?_

Comments like Visnja’s implore those of us who work with young people to learn more about how they perceive environments of armed conflict and its aftermath. Toward that end, the goal of the research discussed in this book was to interact with young people involved in practical activities to gain insights about the development of individuals and society. With an innovative theoretical approach, we ask, “How do young people growing up in political violence understand their plight?”

In spite of our advances, civilization at the beginning of the 21st century continues to be characterized by political violence, which is experienced by increasing numbers of young people (Barber, 2009;

---

1 All young people’s names are pseudonyms.
2 Texts and talk by youth are translations when not originally in English.
xvi Preface

Boyden, 2009). Like many of her peers aged 12 to 27 years across a region fractured by wars during the 1990s, Visnja notices that the views of youth are not taken seriously amidst the din of political conflict and inertia. That Visnja’s frustration verges on sarcasm is all the more understandable given the recent international recognition of children’s rights, support for youth civic engagement, and child-oriented projects like the Millenium Development Goals, 2015 (www.unicef.org/mdg).

With more than 40 nations at war and many others struggling with insurgencies, the effects on children and youth are an urgent concern. Nevertheless, research and practice have focused quite narrowly on psychopathology and social reproduction, especially among young people directly involved in and exposed to acute phases of violence, such as child soldiers, witnesses to death and assaults, and refugee orphans in camps. Because the effects of war persist long after fighting has officially ended – on average, at least seven years (Collier, 2003), an entire generation if not more is subject to myriad consequences, including displacement, poverty, homelessness, exploitation, political instability, interrupted education, unhealthy living conditions, discrimination, and a lack of resources for “youthful pleasures,” as one teenager in our study lamented. To account for the broad reach of political violence across space and time, a developmental approach is long overdue.

Although millions of children’s lives are defined by political violence, we know little about what young people notice, what matters to them, what challenges and opportunities they perceive, or how they draw on resources to deal with those circumstances in their everyday lives. How do bombing, death of loved ones, interruption of schooling, and loss of friends who had to flee figure into their attention, explanations, and goals? Although most youth are concerned about unemployment, for example, they also appreciate free time for spontaneous and caring relationships, even if they have that freedom because “there’s nothing else to focus on but hedonism,” as one youth commented. Defining development as the mutual interaction of individuals in society, we can usefully focus on the perspectives of children and youth whose ideas elders have marginalized. Marginalization sometimes occurs to protect young people, such as from learning about the horrors committed by neighbors during war; sometimes to protect society, such as from facing responsibility for recruiting children to fight; or to serve other ends, such as excluding minorities from participation.
Preface

xvii

“Human development” and “political violence” do not seem to belong together. It is, for example, difficult to believe that humans as advanced as we are in some ways still resort to violence as a political strategy. When we think about young lives, it is, moreover, difficult to believe that children could possibly develop well in the context of armed conflict and the consequences that follow. At the same time, we know that development turns on the uniquely human capacities of language, thought, and creativity, which children learn early to use for their benefit, and thus could apply to chaotic and impoverished situations. The potential of considering such cultural development (Vygotsky, 1978) to explain the consequences of political violence in children’s everyday lives is enormous, albeit untapped. The former Yugoslavia is an appropriate case study for such inquiry not only because of the recent, tragic nature of its dissolution but also because a generation born in one country is now growing up in separate countries and experiencing very different environmental, political, economic, and social circumstances. With this case study, we consider adolescents making transitions to adulthood in nations making political transitions from war to peace and from communist dictatorships to capitalist democracies.

Given the tensions and dangers in contexts of political violence, taking young people seriously, as Visnja urges, is not simply a matter of interviewing them. Human development involves participation in purposeful activities, so it makes sense to elicit youth perspectives in realistic contexts. Participation is, for example, subject to requirements such as the preferred story to tell about the war, tensions such as conflicts between honoring parents’ sacrifices, orienting toward one’s own goals for a better future, and dealing with public pressures to avoid stories that could represent a country in a negative light internationally. Taking young people seriously requires employing research tools that address such realities in their everyday lives, the realities of interacting with other people, institutions, the environment, and their own thoughts. Developmental inquiry must, therefore, occur within the context of meaningful practical activities.
Preface

I wrote this book to integrate theory, research, and practice relevant to child and youth development in extremely challenging circumstances, so I imagine audiences working with diverse goals from diverse disciplinary perspectives. A primary audience is researchers and students who are interested in whether and how diverse challenges affect human development. Educators and program developers are a major audience, as they consider issues of context and developmental processes for designing and implementing programs in extremely challenging situations. My hope is that adults and young people working with youth in schools, community centers, and clinical practice also find a perspective and information that are useful to their activities. This practice-based approach, moreover, offers a new way to design research in situations requiring intervention. When I argue that we consider the normative nature of growing up in crisis situations, I do not imply that political crisis is optimal or acceptable as a developmental context, but that we must understand the full range of interactions to design research, practice, and policy.

The research for this book involved immersion in interdisciplinary studies of the effects of war on children and youth, accounts of the 1990s’ wars in the former Yugoslavia, and ethnographic work with nongovernmental organizations (NGOs), educational institutions, independent scholars, and young people. Some of the archival research, for example, focused on the organizers, goals, and activities of programs devoted to youth development across the region, in particular peace education programs sponsored by numerous institutions including the European Union; the Council of Europe; Ministries of Education, Science, and Sport; Human Rights Centers; academic and outreach programs at universities; school systems; and NGOs working closely with children and families. The empirical phase of the study involved creating a workshop curriculum consistent with programs I had observed, implementing this Dynamic Story-Telling by Youth research workshop with young people, and analyzing young people’s work to learn about their views.
Preface

Organization of the Book

Chapter 1 reviews previous approaches to studying the effects of human-made crises, concluding that what is missing is a developmental approach. Chapter 2 offers a theoretical and methodological rationale for this developmental approach based on principles of cultural–historical activity theory, bringing these theoretical premises to life with practices in the Dynamic Story-Telling by Youth workshop, which serves as a context for the basic research about development in violence.

Chapters 3 through 6 present young people’s perspectives on conflict as it has affected various aspects of their lives and goals for the future. We learn from those chapters how young people use cultural tools, such as narrating, to manage (mediate) personal and societal relations, as would their peers in more mundane contexts. Chapter 3 explains that young people can echo their specific national scripts but also that these scripts are living history evolving in relation to current circumstances rather than the frozen narratives of war. Chapter 4 reveals the particularly contentious local knowledge that emerges as young participants shift positions of social–relational discourse. Chapter 5 focuses on youth participation in their communities as an important site of self and societal development. Chapter 6 focuses on “sociobiographies,” individual variations within and across the diverse national psyches identified in Chapters 3 and 4. Chapter 7 zooms out from our illustrative case study to suggest implications for human development research, practice, and policy in other regions plagued by political conflict and transition.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Because the project discussed in this book builds on my previous research, I feel as though I have been nurturing it along for a long time, in a most focused way since 2001, when I broadened my focus on social development in conflict from United States to international contexts in which children are experiencing major challenges to their well-being and development. This current research reaching from Serbia in the East to New York in the West has, of course, involved the support of generous foundations, organizations, and individuals. Support for the journey to the former Yugoslavia came first from the Rockefeller Foundation Bellagio Center, which supported my transitional research for an international conference to shift the study of child and youth conflict from a primarily biological one to a more integrated bio-socio-behavioral analysis. That project resulted in the volume International Perspectives on Youth Conflict and Development (Oxford University Press, 2006) involving coeditors Larry Nucci, Craig Higson-Smith, and Zeynep Beykont and chapter authors from across seven continents, to whom I am indebted for their insights and collaboration. More recently, I am grateful to the United States Institute of Peace, the National Council of Teachers of English, the PSC-CUNY Research Fund, and the Graduate Center of the City University of New York for grants that made this transnational research possible. The ideas, conclusions, and suggested implications herein are mine and not those of these supporting organizations, but I hope these organizations find the work useful, persuasive, and indicative for future agendas.

Several scholarly institutes made it possible for me to engage in the interdisciplinary conversations required for this approach to transnational child and youth development in armed conflict. During my work on this project, colleagues at seminars at several gathering places involved me in their activities and patiently listened to a developmental psychologist, not typically at their table: The Harriman Institute at the Columbia University School for International Affairs, where I spent my sabbatical as a Visiting Scholar analyzing data and writing drafts; The Institute of Advanced Study at the University of Warwick, where I was a Visiting Fellow discussing material from several chapters; and the Center for Place, Culture, and Politics and the Center for the Humanities, both at the Graduate Center of the City University of New York, where participation in seminars on war, violence and political change introduced me to literature and debates in political science, philosophy, history, geography, and English. Opportunities to present preliminary analyses at the University of Zagreb and the University of Belgrade were also essential to my being able to progress from analyzing the rich reflections by young people to writing about them in a way that communicates across contexts.
Preface

Administrators, youth advocates, and young people at several NGOs participated in the project in a range of ways by inviting me to observe their activities or participating in the research. Among many other activities, these colleagues discussed the ongoing needs of youth across the region, commented on and translated materials, recruited participants, led workshops, and hosted me and my research assistants. NGOs involved in various phases along the way include RACOON in the United States, Suncokret and Globus in Croatia, Group Most in Serbia, Prism Research and Krila Nade in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and the Bosnian Bakery in the United States. Individuals in these organizations who deserve my sincere gratitude include Maja Turniski, Mei Eldorazdi, Dragan Popodic, Rada Gosovic, Dino Djepa, Snjeziana Kojic Hasanajic, Lejla Kadic, and Indira Kajosevic, among others. I am also extremely grateful to research assistants, especially Luka Lucic, for relevant conversations, data-analysis contributions, helping with the workshops translations, and coauthorship on related studies; to Danielle Delpriore and Vicky Barrios for their assistance in coding; and to Nikolina Knezivic, Dean Valutec, and Maja Turniski for translations. Very special thanks to Maja Turniski, who first invited me to Croatia, where I observed her important work with Predrag Mraovic and an amazing group of young people who were hopeful, creative, and loving while growing up in difficult circumstances.
Preface

Many thanks to Sarah W. Freedman, Alexander Motyl, Merry Bullock, and Jerome Bruner for their time, wisdom, and critical and encouraging comments on the draft of this manuscript. Their close readings provided an invaluable sense of audience for the final manuscript and the basis for ongoing conversations. I am also grateful to Simina Calin for her astute editorial guidance. Thanks to Jack Wright for his assistance with the manuscript. The encouragement of Doris and Joseph Daiute forever has been essential to staying with this large and long-term project.

Finally, but not least, to Visnja and the other young people who participated so generously in this study and activities leading up to it, I offer my thanks and respect not only for your plights but also for the dignity with which you have weathered them. My sincere hope is that if you read this book, you think that I listened to you, took you seriously, and got it right.