This is a pioneering, multi-empire account of the relationship between the politics of imperial repression and the economic structures of European colonies between the two world wars. Ranging across colonial Africa, Southeast Asia and the Caribbean, Martin Thomas explores the structure of local police forces, their involvement in colonial labour control and the containment of uprisings and dissent. His work sheds new light on broader trends in the direction and intent of colonial state repression. It shows that the management of colonial economies, particularly in crisis conditions, took precedence over individual imperial powers' particular methods of rule in determining the forms and functions of colonial police actions. The politics of colonial labour thus became central to police work, with the depression years marking a watershed not only in local economic conditions but also in the breakdown of the European colonial order more generally.

Martin Thomas is Professor of Imperial History in the Department of History at the University of Exeter. He is a director of the University's Centre for the Study of War, State and Society, an inter-disciplinary research centre that supports research into the impact of armed conflict and collective violence on societies and communities.
Critical Perspectives on Empire

Editors
Professor Catherine Hall
University College London

Professor Mrinalini Sinha
Pennsylvania State University

Professor Kathleen Wilson
State University of New York, Stony Brook

Critical Perspectives on Empire is a major series of ambitious, cross-disciplinary works in the emerging field of critical imperial studies. Books in the series explore the connections, exchanges and mediations at the heart of national and global histories, the contributions of local as well as metropolitan knowledge, and the flows of people, ideas and identities facilitated by colonial contact. To that end, the series not only offers a space for outstanding scholars working at the intersection of several disciplines to bring to wider attention the impact of their work; it also takes a leading role in reconfiguring contemporary historical and critical knowledge, of the past and of ourselves.

A full list of titles published in the series can be found at:
www.cambridge.org/cpempire
Violence and Colonial Order

Police, Workers and Protest in the European Colonial Empires, 1918–1940

Martin Thomas
CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS
Cambridge, New York, Melbourne, Madrid, Cape Town,
Singapore, São Paulo, Delhi, Mexico City
Cambridge University Press
The Edinburgh Building, Cambridge CB2 8RU, UK

Published in the United States of America by Cambridge University Press,
New York

www.cambridge.org
Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9780521768412

© Martin Thomas 2012

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press.

First published 2012

Printed and Bound in Great Britain by the MPG Books Group

A catalogue record for this publication is available from the British Library

Library of Congress Cataloguing in Publication data
Thomas, Martin, 1964–
Violence and colonial order : police, workers and protest in the European colonial empires, 1918–1940 / Martin Thomas.
Includes bibliographical references and index.
JCS85.T483 2012 303.6091712409041–dc23 2012018833

Cambridge University Press has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party internet websites referred to in this publication, and does not guarantee that any content on such websites is,
or will remain, accurate or appropriate.
In memory of my father, Rex Thomas
Contents

List of maps  ix
List of tables  x
Acknowledgements  xi

Introduction: Police, labour and colonial violence  1

Part I  Ideas and practices  15
1 Colonial policing: A discursive framework  17
2 ‘What did you do in the colonial police force, daddy?’ Policing inter-war dissent  42
3 ‘Paying the butcher’s bill?:’ Policing British colonial protest after 1918  64

Part II  Colonial case studies: French, British and Belgian  87
4 Gendarmes: Work and policing in French North Africa after 1918  89
5 Policing Tunisia: Mineworkers, fellahs and nationalist protest  112
6 Rubber, coolies and communists: Policing disorder in French Vietnam  141
7 Stuck together? Rubber production, labour regulation and policing in Malaya  177
8 Caning the workers? Policing and violence in Jamaica’s sugar industry  206
9 Oil and order: Repressive violence in Trinidad’s oilfields  235
vi Contents

10 Profits, privatization and police: The birth of Sierra Leone's diamond industry 256

11 Policing and politics in Nigeria: The political economy of indirect rule, 1929–39 277

12 Depression and revolt: Policing the Belgian Congo 301

Conclusion 325

Notes to the text 335
Bibliography 459
Index 517
Maps

4.1 French North African colonial territories

5.1 French colonial map of Northern and Central Africa, c. 1925

5.2 French War Ministry map, ‘Comintern activity in North Africa’, produced in August 1936 (AN F60, 769)

6.1 French colonial map of Indochina, c. 1938

6.2 Economic map of colonial Indochina in 1930

7.1 Colonial Malaya

7.2 Rubber cultivation in Malaya

8.1 Caribbean territories

10.1 Map of West Africa prepared for the British Bank of West Africa

11.1 Colonial Nigeria

12.1 Belgian Congo administrative territories, 1926 and 1933

page 94

113

139

143

146

178

180

207

259

278

304
Tables

4.1 Gendarmerie personnel, May 1917
6.1 Vietnam rubber plantations, size in hectares (he), distribution and ownership, April 1936
6.2 Size of Vietnam’s rubber plantations (in hectares – he), April 1936
7.1 FMS plantation wage rates (in Malayan dollars), January 1928
7.2 Straits Settlements Special Branch arrests of communist suspects, 1932–3
7.3 Straits Settlements Special Branch anti-communist section raids, 1931–5
12.1 Numbers of European-owned industrial, commercial and agricultural businesses in the Belgian Congo, 1930–1
12.2 Union Minière du Haut Katanga workforce composition, 1925–30
Acknowledgements

When I began work on this book the oligarchic regimes of the Arab world seemed deeply entrenched, the phrase ‘credit crunch’ meant nothing and my favourite football team stood three divisions higher. With so many years passed, I’m not sure that a few words can do justice to the support I’ve had from friends and funders alike in bringing this project to fruition. Writing a comparative study of colonial policing has involved lots of travelling and lots of requests. The travel and the writing it generated were made possible by the award of a Leverhulme Trust Major Research Fellowship, which gave me the time and space to pursue this study. An earlier pilot project grant from the Nuffield Foundation allowed me to do essential preliminary foraging. The requests were usually made to archivists and the gatekeepers of various private papers. My thanks go to the staff at each of the archives and libraries I’ve visited as well as to the trustees of the following private paper collections: Clarence Buxton, Alfred Chester Beatty, Fernand Gambiez, Jamaica Sugar Estates Limited, Henry de Jouvenel, Baron Killearn, Guy La Chambre, Sir Percy Loraine, Louis-Hubert Lyautey, Malcolm MacDonald, Georges Mandel, Alfred Milner, Marius Moutet, Joseph Paul-Boncour, Gabriel Puaux, John Roland Phillips, the Rubber Growers’ Association, Albert Sarraut and Maxime Weygand.

Several ideas and some of the case studies discussed in this book were tested before audiences in France, Britain, Canada, Germany, Ireland, Qatar and the United States. Among the organizations involved were the Al Jazeera Research Centre, Bristol University’s Centre for the Study of Colonial and Post-Colonial Societies, the École Normale Supérieure, the Society for French Historical Studies, the Institute of Commonwealth Studies Decolonization Seminar, the International Studies Association, Paris I Sorbonne, the University of Freiburg, University College, Galway and University College, Dublin’s Centre for War Studies. I thank them all for helping me to clarify my thoughts.

For reading chapters, offering hospitality, providing archival leads, or talking over the research I am grateful to the following: Robert Aldrich,
Acknowledgements

Andrew Barros, Robert Bickers, Emmanuel Blanchard, Dan Branch, Raphaëlle Branche, Alison Carrol, Joshua Cole, Richard Drayton, Saul Dubow, Marie Dunkerley, David Edgerton, Martin Evans, Kent and Gudrun Fedorowich, Robert Gerwarth, Ruth Ginio, Chris Goscha, Martin Horn, Stacey Hynd, Talbot Imlay, Julian Jackson, Peter Jackson, Keith Jeffery, Anja Johansen, Sam Kalman, Feriel Kissoon, Simon Kitson, Jean-François Klein, Patricia Lorcin, Richard Overy, Rogelia Pastor-Castro, Jennifer Regan-Lefevre, Todd Shepard, Emmanuelle Sibeud, Sarah Stockwell, Sylvie Thénault, Andrew Thompson, Mike Vann, Helen Vassallo, Mathilde von Bülow and Kim Wagner. At Cambridge University Press, I’ve been expertly advised by Michael Watson, Nicola Philps and the editors of the Critical Perspectives on Empire series as well as the anonymous readers of the original manuscript. Rose Bell provided expert copy-editing. Colleagues at the University of Exeter and its Centre for the Study of War, State and Society have provided a supportive academic environment throughout. Closer to home, to Suzy goes the biggest ‘thank you’ of them all.