Index

achievement: and McClelland’s theory of motivation, 206–7; and moral judgments of American university students, 47–8; and personal experiences of Japanese adolescents, 210, 214–15, 217–18 adjustment: of Japanese adolescents as returnees, 231–2; 246–7; of Japanese preschool children to group behavior in preschools, 149–67 adolescents: individualism and socio-centrism in personal experiences of Japanese, 205–25; and omoiyari, 4–7, 11–14, 20; and returnees to Japan, 228–52 aggression, and moral judgments, 43 Ainsworth, M. D. S., xii–xiv altruism, and concept of omoiyari, 9 annae: and adaptation of Japanese preschool children to group behavior, 160, 248; and characteristics of Japanese culture, 54; and concept of omoiyari, 9; and Japanese adolescents as returnees, 250; and Japanese ethnopsychology, xv; and Japanese family, 147–8, 149, 169; and maternal role in Japan, 86–7, 88, 93, 97, 106, 107n8, 108; and mother-preschool child relationships in Japan, 112, 121, 123, 133–4, 137; and peer interactions in Japanese kindergarten, 198 annajakasu, and mother-child relationships in Japan, 133–4 ambivalence, and omoiyari as Japanese cultural norm, 11–14 anthropology: and psychological universalism, xi; and role of mother in Japan, 86; and studies of socialization and cultural behavior, 143 anxiety, and attitudes toward returnees in Japan, 228. See also separation anxiety apology: Japanese and American concepts of compared, 18; and Japanese ethnopsychology, xvi, xviii assurance, trust and concept of, 33–4 authority: and approach of Japanese preschool teachers to discipline, 166–7; and comparison of American and Japanese attitudes, 168 autonomy, and Kohlberg’s theory of moral development, 58n2, 79 Azuma, H., xiii, xiv, 31, 32, 36, 87, 181, 187, 206, 220 Baldwin, J., 58n2 Baumrind, D., 138 Beardsley, R., 172
Beliefs, of Japanese mothers about childrearing, 130–5
Bellah, R. N., 53
Benedict, R., 32, 112, 170, 205, 218
Bersoff, D. M., 37
Betrayal, and moral judgments, 43
Blackburn, T. C., 31
Bond, and relationships between Japanese mothers and preschool children, 132–5
Bourne, E., 205
Bruner, J. S., xii, 35
Bullying, and personal experiences of Japanese adolescents, 215–16. See also ijime
Categorical judgments, and comparison of American and Japanese concepts of morality, 41
Caudill, W., xix–xx, 53, 112, 265
Center for Moral Development and Education (Harvard University), 56
Children and child development: and background of Japanese adolescents, 214; and “crisis” in contemporary Japanese childrearing, 257–65; and internalization of cultural norms of group life, 170–200; and mother as sole caretaker in Japan, 89–92; socialization of and moral judgments, 36–7; and Strange Situation (SS) as measure of attachment, xiii–xiv; and transition of Japanese preschool children to group behavior, 143–69. See also adolescents; mothers; schools
China, and Confucian concept of morality, 52
Clancy, P. M., 120, 124, 172, 176, 178, 188, 220, 246
Class: and employment of mothers in Japan, 103–5; 263; and peer interactions in Japanese kindergarten, 197–8; and postwar concepts of childrearing in Japan, 238, 263; and Tokugawa period in Japanese history, 171. See also middle class
Cocking, R., xii
Coding, and comparative study of moral judgments of American and Japanese university students, 43, 44. See also methodology
Colby, A., 52, 586, 7597
Cole, M., xii, 32, 49
Collectivism: individualism and moral judgments, 32; Japanese society and identity, 232. See also groups and group behavior; social relativism Commitment, and maternal role in Japan, 94–7, 109
Communication: globalism and cultural differences in, 49; and Japanese ethnopsychology, xv–xix; of mothers and teachers of Japanese preschool children, 150–2; and peer interactions in Japanese kindergarten, 178, 182, 187–88, 199. See also language Compassion, and concept of omoiyari, 9–10
Compliance, and mother-child relationships in Japan, 127–9
Conflict: between honne and tatemae in emotions of Japanese adolescents, 211–12; and Japanese cultural norms of interpersonal communication, 151; and maternal role in Japan, 95–7, 99–103, 106–8; and omoiyari as Japanese cultural norm, 11–14; and peer interactions in Japanese kindergarten, 192, 200; and relationship between Japanese mothers and preschool children, 120–30
Confucianism, and concepts of morality in China, 52
Conformity: and concept of cultural common sense in Japanese cultural psychology, 47; and group norms in Japan, 171 Confrontation, and comparison of moral judgments of American and Japanese university students, 46–7. See also conflict connectedness, and comparison of moral reasoning of American and Japanese adults, 78–9. See also social relativism Conroy, M., 36, 136, 172
cooperation, and peer interactions in Japanese kindergarten, 185–7 Coopersmith, S., 138 coping mechanisms, of Japanese adolescents as returnees, 246 core event, and comparison of moral judgments of American and Japanese university students, 43
“courage to be,” and dynamic interrelationships of Japanese adolescents, 222–4
Cousins, S., 220
creation myth, and omoiyari, 9
creativity, and constructive play in Japanese kindergarten, 176–80 crime stories, and cultural scripts, 36
Crook, C., 113
cross-cultural studies: and phenomenal absolutism in academic psychology, 23; and variations in moral scripts, 37, 49. See also culture cultural grammar approach, to Japanese cultural psychology, 2, 18–19, 21 cultural psychodynamics, and Japanese ethnopsychology, xv, xix, xx cultural psychology: and concepts of self, 205; development of Japanese, xii–xxv; and experiential approach to omoiyari, 2–14; hypothetical and corrigible anchor point in Japanese, 14–24; Japan and recent research in, 1–2; universalism and image of Japan, xii–xiii. See also ethnopsychocultural relativism: and image of Japan in Western psychology, xi–xii; and Wierzbicka’s cultural script approach, 17–18 cultural scripts: and comparison of moral judgments of American and Japanese university students, 34–49; and omoiyari, 4–7 culture: influence of on moral judgments, 31–2, 74–9; and Japanese adolescents as returnees, 230–1, 238, 246; and maternal role in Japan, 86–7, 110; moral reasoning and characteristics of American and Japanese, 53–4; and mother-child relationships in Japan, 112–14; preschool experience and Japanese, 169; role of in childrearing in contemporary Japan, 265. See also cross-cultural studies; values dale, P., 206
dantai ishiki, and group orientation in Japanese society, 232 demography: and decline of birthrate in contemporary Japan, 260, 261–2; and number of children in Japanese family, 89 deVos, G. A., xviii, 6, 16, 86, 205, 207, 220, 224
dien, D. S., 52
direct control, and mother-child relationships in Japan, 122–4 doi, T., xiii, xv, xiv, xvii, 9, 10, 54, 86, 112, 220, 258, 265 dore, R. P., 170
dualism, of honne and tatemae in Japanese society, 109
dumont, L., 205
economics: and “crisis” of childcareing in contemporary Japan, 259, 262–3, 264; socioeconomic conditions and maternal role in Japan, 87–9, 98n4, 109; and socioeconomic theory of trust, 33–4 education. See schools; teachers
Index

elderly, and demographic trends in contemporary Japan, 260–1 emotions: and emphasis of Japanese mother on bond with child, 132–5; maternal role in Japan and control of, 95–7, 103; personal experiences of Japanese adolescents and conflicts in, 211–12 empathy. See omoi employment, of mothers in Japan, 92, 93, 98, 99, 100, 101, 103, 104, 105–6 Enloe, W., 230
enryo: and group behavior of Japanese preschool children, 144, 147, 149, 248; and peer interactions in Japanese kindergarten, 187
ethnocentrism: Markus and Kitayama’s and Wierzbicka’s approaches to minimization of in academic psychology, 1–2, 21; social and behavioral science studies on Japan, 265 ethnography, and studies of Japanese family life and childrearing patterns, 111, 113, 138–9 ethnopsychology: communicative practices and Japanese, xv–xix; definition of, xiv–xv. See also cultural psychology experiential approach, to omoi, 2–14 experimental approach, to Japanese cultural psychology, 2, 14–17 explicit strategies, and teaching of communicative and social skills by Japanese mothers, 1171, 119–21, 135–6 fallibility, and cultural script approach to Japanese cultural psychology, 21 family: and “crisis” in contemporary Japanese childrearing, 257–65; and demographic trends in Japan, 89; and group behavior of Japanese children, 147–8; and experiences of Japanese adolescents in U.S. and on return to Japan, 240; play and peer interactions in Japanese kindergarten, 180, 182, 183, 184. See also children and child development; home; mothers fantasy play, and peer interactions in Japanese kindergarten, 180–5, 198 fathers, involvement of in childrearing in Japan, 89–92, 102, 259 feudal period, impact of on development of Japanese culture, 29, 30, 34, 48
Forbes, D., 180
formality, and language of peer interactions in Japanese kindergarten, 193–8 friendships: and adaptation of Japanese preschool children to group behavior, 167, 168; and experiences of Japanese adolescents in U.S., 239, 243. See also peer groups and peer culture; relationships Geertz, C., 4, 205
gender: and experiences of Japanese adolescents in U.S., 240; and patterns of speech in peer interactions of Japanese kindergarten children, 193, 194–5, 199. See also women globalism: and impact of international trade on Japan, 30; and international communication, 49; and temporary migration of Japanese families, 232
Goodman, R., 228, 229, 230, 231, 232
Goodnow, J., xii
Greenfield, P., xii groups and group behavior: and internalization of cultural norms by Japanese children, 170–200; and Japanese adolescents as returnees, 232; and transition of Japanese children to preschool, 143–69. See also relationships; social skills
Gruzec, J., 113
Index

Hakuta, K., 206
Hallowell, I., 224
Hamaguchi, E., 220
Harvard University, 56, 175
Harwood, R. L., 37
Hatano, G., xii
Hearn, L., 8
Heidegger, M., 220
Hendry, J., 112
Hess, R., xiv, xvii, 36
Hewer, A., 75
high schools, and interviews with Japanese adolescents, 411, 208, 232, 233–4. See also schools hiragana, and maternal role in Japan, 87
Hiroike, C. A., 78–9
Hito, and group behavior of Japanese children, 148–9, 169 home: and early socialization of Japanese children, 172–5; and teaching of group behaviors by Japanese preschool children, 143, 148, 248. See also family honme: and concept of omoiyari, 10; and maternal role in Japan, 109; and personal experiences of Japanese adolescents, 211–2, 213
Hsu, F. L. K., 205
Ide, S., 176, 193
identity: age and gender in Japanese language and society, 195; Japanese society and collective, 232. See also self iijime, and experiences of Japanese adolescents as returnees, 230–1. See also bullying Imai, Y., 36
independence, and mother-child relationship in Japan, 139. See also individualism indirect control, and teaching of social skills by Japanese mothers of preschool children, 124–7, 135 individualism: collectivism and moral judgments, 32; and personal experiences of Japanese adolescents, 205–25 individuation, and goals of human development, 206. See also independence industrialization, and impact of socioeconomic conditions on maternal role in Japan, 88 inferred strategies, and teaching of communicative and social skills by Japanese mothers, 112, 122–7 interrater reliability, and scoring of interviews on moral reasoning, 56–7. See also methodology interviews: with Japanese adolescents on achievement, moral conflict, and interpersonal behavior, 411; with Japanese adolescents on individualism and sociocentrism, 208; with Japanese adolescents as returnees, 235–6; with Japanese teachers on adaptation of preschool children to group behavior, 146. See also methodology ittaikan, and group behavior in Japanese society, 198
Iwasa, N., 31, 207
Japan: and adolescents as returnees, 228–52; and comparison of moral reasoning of American and Japanese adults, 51–81; and comparison of moral scripts of American and Japanese university students, 29–49; and “crisis” in contemporary childrearing, 257–65; and cultural psychodynamics, xix–xx; and cultural relativism in Western psychology, xi–xii; and development of cultural psychology, xii–xv; ethnopsychology and communicative practices in, xv–xix; and experiential approach to omoiyari, 2–14; and individualism-collectivism dichotomy, 32–4; individualism and sociocentrism in personal experiences of adolescents, 205–25; and internalization of cultural norms of group life by children, 170–200; and recent research in cultural psychology, 1–2; and relationships between mothers and preschool children, 111–39; and transition of children to preschool groups, 143–69
Japan (cont.)

Japanese Cultural Encounters and How to Handle Them (Kataoka, 1991), 18

Japanese language. See language

Japanese Patterns of Behavior, The (Lebra, 1976), xvi, 3

justice, and ambiguity about omoiyari among Japanese adolescents, 13

Kagan, J., 113

Kaigishijo Kyoiku Shinko Zaidan (1991), 230, 231

Kant, I., 58

Kashima, Y., 32

Kataoka, H., 18

daijigaru, and mother-child relationships in Japan, 133–4

keijime, and Japanese view of conformity, 171

Kelly, V. E., xvi, 246, 249

Kelly-Suzuki, V., 175, 180

kikokushijo (returnees), and experiences of Japanese adolescents, 228

Kimura, B., 220

kindergartens: and maternal role in Japan, 89, 106; and socialization of Japanese children, 172–5

Kirkpatrick, J., xv

Kitayama, S., xii, 14–17, 21, 22–4, 33, 37, 205, 220

ki zukare, and psychological tension in social relationships in Japan, 169 knowledge, constructive play in Japanese kindergarten and sharing of, 176–80

Kobayashi, S., xiv, 172, 187, 231–2

Kohlberg, L., 31, 38, 51–2, 55, 58n2, 60, 65–6, 73, 74, 75, 79, 206, 207

Kondo, D. K., xvii, xviii, 17–18, 219, 228, 232

kosodate mama, and ideal of maternal role in Japan, 85–6, 87, 88, 98, 103–5, 109, 257

Krauss, E., 224

Kuczynski, L., 113

Kuhn, T., 22

Kumagai, H. H., 87

language: and peer interactions in Japanese kindergarten, 193–8; situation-appropriate codes in Japanese, 246; translation of key terms from Japanese, xv–xvi. See also communication

Lanham, B., 112, 172

Lebra, T. S., xiii, xvi, 2, 3, 4, 8–9, 10–11, 86, 112, 113, 124, 136, 144, 149, 169, 171, 181, 219, 246

LeTendre, G. K., 206

Levine, C., 75n7

Levine, J., 113

LeVine, R. A., xii, xvi, 5, 53, 264, 265

Levy, R. L., xv

Levin, P., 230

Lewis, C. C., xvii, 138–9, 166, 174, 175, 206, 220

Lindholm, C., 15–16, 224

literacy rate, of Japan in feudal period, 29

Lock, M., xi, 97

logic: associations of and communication in peer interactions in Japanese kindergarten, 180; of discovery and interviews with Japanese adolescents, 208

Lutz, C., xv, 17–18

Madsen, R., 53

magokoro: and Japanese ethnopsychology, xvi; and social relativism in Japanese culture, 3

Malinowski, B., xi
Markus, H., xii, 14–17, 21, 22–4, 33, 37, 205, 220
Marsella, A. J., 205
Mashima, M., 36–7
Mathews, G., xviii
Matsuda, M., 195
Matsumoto, H., 15
Maxwell, J. A., 208
McClelland, D. C., 206–7
Mead, Margaret, xi
Meiji Era (1868–1912), and role of women in Japan, 258
mercy, and concept of omiyari, 9–10 methodology: and study of adaptation of Japanese preschool children to group behavior, 145–9; and study of Japanese adolescents as returnees, 234–7; and study of peer interactions in Japanese kindergarten, 175–6. See also coding; interrater reliability; interviews; observation; scoring; videotapes Methodology and Epistemology for Social Sciences: Selected Papers (Overman, 1988), 24 middle class: and “crisis” of childrearing in contemporary Japan, 262, 264; and kosodate mama as ideal for maternal role in urban Japan, 103–105, 259; and study of mother-child relationships in Japan, 114. See also class
Miller, J. G., xii, 37
Miller, P., xii
Ministry of Education (Japan), 167, 229, 231
Minoura, Y., 229, 248
Minton, C., 113
Miyachi, S., 228, 230, 232
Miyake, K., 32
Monbusho Kyoku Josei Kyoku (1991), 228, 231
morality: and comparison of cultural scripts and moral judgments of American and Japanese university students, 35–49, 207; and comparison of moral reasoning of American and Japanese adults, 51–81; and comparison of standards in Japan and U. S., 29–32; and conceptual issues, 32–5; and cultural bias in philosophy, 30; definition of, 30; and Kohlberg’s stages of, 51–2, 55–6, 60, 65–6, 73, 79; and Kohlberg’s theory of reasoning, 207; and personal experiences of Japanese adolescents, 210–11, 216–17, 218–19
Moral Judgment Interview (MJI), 55–6, 73, 77, 80–1
Moriya, K., 37
Nagano, S., 165n5
Nakamura, H., 54
Nakane, C., 139, 171, 198, 219, 232, 246 narratives: and analysis of structure of moral judgments of American and Japanese university students, 44–7; and Japanese ethnopsychology, xvi. See also story Natural Semantic Metalanguage, and Wierzbicka’s cultural script approach, 19 negotiations, and mother-child relationship in Japan, 135–9 nemawashi, consensus-building and Japanese cultural values, 199–200
nihonjinron, and theory of Japanese uniqueness, 205–6
Nissan, M., 52
Niwa, T., 195
Nomoto, T., 36–7
Norasakkunkit, V., 15
Norbeck, E. and M., 172
normative content, of behavioral and speech occurrences in Japanese kindergarten, 176, 182 norms. See culture; social norms; values nursery schools. See preschools observation: of adaptation of Japanese preschool children to group behavior, 146; of mother-child relationships in Japan, 114–15; of peer interactions in Japanese kindergarten, 191–2. See also methodology omoiyari: and concepts of childrearing in postwar Japan, 238–9; and experiential approach to Japanese cultural psychology, 2–14; and Japanese ethnopsychology, xvi, xvii, xviii; and maternal role in Japan, 97; and peer interactions in Japanese kindergarten, 198, 200, 248; and personal experiences of Japanese adolescents, 209–10, 216, 224 ontological analysis, of sociocentrism and individualism in Japanese adolescents, 219–24
ortholinon, as principle of morality, 78–9 Overman, E. S., 24
oya-ko, and group behavior in Japan, 198
ozendate, and social relativism in Japanese culture, 3 paradox, and cultural script approach to Japanese cultural psychology, 21 participation, of Japanese preschool children in group activities, 161 Peak, L., xvi, 112, 173, 174, 187, 206, 248 peer groups and peer culture: and internalization of cultural norms of group life by Japanese children, 170–200; and Japanese adolescents in U.S. and after return to Japan, 237, 247, 249; and personal experiences of Japanese adolescents, 214–15. See also friendships; relationships
Peer Interaction Project (Harvard University), 175 Pelzel, J. C., 9 personality: and experiences of Japanese adolescents in U.S., 237, 242; and parenting patterns in Japan and U.S., 139 persuasion, and teaching of communicative and social skills by Japanese mothers, 119–29, 127–9 phenomenal absolutism, and Japanese cultural psychology, 21–4 phenomenological analytical framework, and personal experiences of Japanese adolescents, 220–4 Plath, D., xix
play, and peer interactions in Japanese kindergarten, 176–87
possession, and fantasy play in Japanese kindergarten, 181
Pott, M., 32
preschools: and adaptation of Japanese children to group situations, 143–69, 248, 251; and educational system in Japan, 89n2; and working mothers in Japan, 103. See also children and child development; kindergartens process orientation, and moral judgments of Japanese university students, 47–8 pronouns, and forms of address in Japanese language, 193–4 prosocial behavior, and peer interactions in Japanese kindergarten, 182, 189, 198 psychology: development of in Japan, xiii–xiv; ethnocentrism in academic, 1–2; Japan and cultural relativism in Western, xi–xii. See also cultural psychology; ethnopsychology rashiku-suru, and Japanese moral concepts, 30 reality, and peer interactions in Japanese kindergarten, 180–5, 187, 195–6 refusal, of school attendance by preschool children in Japan, 149–52. See also separation anxiety relationships: and comparison of moral judgments of American and Japanese university students, 43, 46–7; of mothers and preschool children in Japan, 111–39; and personal experiences of Japanese adolescents, 213; psychological tension in Japanese social, 169. See also friendships; peer groups and peer culture; social skills responsibility: and Japanese child-training goals and adult behavior, xvii; and peer interactions in Japanese kindergarten, 185–7

Rice, Y. N., xiv, 172, 257
Rogoff, B., 206, 225, 250
Rohlen, T. P., 113, 205, 224, 262 roles: acceptance of maternal in Japan, 92–4; behaviors and concept of omoiyari, 5, 6; and degree of maternal commitment in Japan, 94–7, 109; dissatisfaction with maternal in Japan, 97–103; expression of conflict and maternal in Japan, 106–8; and fantasy play in Japanese kindergarten, 180–5; gender and peer interactions in Japanese kindergarten, 194–5; mother’s awareness of in Japan, 136–8; and perfectionism in contemporary Japan, 30–1. See also family Rothbaum, F. M., 31, 32

sabotage, and omoiyari in Japanese culture, 7–11
Sato, G., 228
Schaffer, H., 113
Schooler, C., xix

schools: and internalization of values by Japanese children, 167; and socialization of Japanese children in group behavior, 144. See also high schools; kindergartens; preschools; teachers scoring, of interviews on moral reasoning, 56–7, 75, 76. See also methodology Seagal, M. H., 21

self: comparison of American and Japanese concepts of, 15–17; dynamic interrelationships and finitude of, 221–4; and individualism-collectivism dichotomy, 33, 205; and ontological analysis of personal experiences of Japanese adolescents, 224–5; and phenomenal absolutism of academic psychology, 22. See also identity; self-representations self-rating, and maternal commitment in Japan, 94–7 self-reliance, and adaptation of Japanese preschool children to group behavior, 156–60 self-representations: in American and Japanese cultures, 15–17; of Japanese adolescents as returnees, 251. See also identity; self self-reproach, as recurrent psychological and cultural theme in Japan, xvii–xix sensitivity, of Japanese mothers to sensitivity (cont.)

reactions of preschool children, 127–30 separation anxiety, and adaptation of Japanese children to preschool groups, 153–5 Shigaki, L., 173, 175
shudan seikatsu, and maternal role in Japan, 99, 100, 101
Shimizu, H., xvi, 4–7, 9, 11–14, 17, 19–21, 32
shūdan sekaisatsu: conformity and group dynamics in Japan, 171–2; Japanese schools and group behavior, 144, 146–7, 153, 156, 160, 251; and peer interactions in Japanese kindergarten, 176, 185, 187, 198, 248 Shwedler, R. A., xii, xiv, 205 sincerity, and concept of omoiyari, 10
Snarey, J. R., 52, 76
social norms: and interpersonal communication in Japan, 152; and personal moral judgments, 31–2; speech formality and peer interactions in Japanese kindergarten, 195–8 social policy, and demographic trends in contemporary Japan, 260–2 social relativism: and contrast between Japanese and American norms, xiii; and omoiyari, 3. See also collectivism; connectedness social skills, Japanese mothers of preschool children and teaching of, 115–20, 135–6, 139. See also groups and group behavior; relationships sociocentrism, and individualism in personal experiences of Japanese adolescents, 205–25
sociopathy, sabotage and concept of in Japanese culture, 7 soto, and group behavior of Japanese children, 143–4, 149
Spiro, M., 18
Standard Issue Scoring Manual, 56, 57
Stieholf, P. C., 224
Stevenson, H., xii, 206, 220, 263
Stigler, J., xii story, and comparison of moral judgments of American and Japanese university students, 42–9. See also narrative subjective experience, and phenomenological analysis of personal experiences of Japanese adolescents, 220 suggestive strategies, and teaching of communicative and social skills by Japanese mothers, 117, 121–2 Sullivan, W. M., 53
sunao: and childrearing in postwar Japan, 259; and Japanese ethnopsychology, xvii; and teaching of social skills by Japanese mothers of preschool children, 123, 130–2, 139
Swidler, A., 53
Takahashi, A., 37
Takahashi, K., xiii–xiv
Takano, Y., 32
Taniuchi, L., 154
tanomu, and concept of omoiyari, 10
tantrums, of Japanese preschool children, 99
tateme: and concept of omoiyari, 10; and maternal role in Japan, 109; and personal experiences of Japanese adolescents, 211–12, 213 teachers: beliefs and classroom practices of Japanese kindergarten, 173; interviews with on adaptation of Japanese preschool children to group behavior, 146; and Japanese adolescents as returnees, 228; and socialization of Japanese preschool children in group behavior, 144, 150–2, 155–67, 188. See also schools teasing, as amae-oriented strategy for child socialization, 123 television serial, and portrayal of middle-class family in Japan, 259–60
Thematic Apperception Test, xviii
Tillich, P., 220–1, 222, 223, 225
Tipton, S. M., 53
Tokugawa Shogunate period (1600–1868): and Japanese class system, 171; and Japanese moral concepts, 30
Tomo, R., 36–7
trade, and impact of international contacts on Japan, 30
Travis, C., 220
Triandis, H., 246
trust, socioeconomic theory of, 33–4
uchii, and group behavior of Japanese children, 143–4, 149

Ugaya, H., 232
United States: adolescents returning to Japan after residence in, 228–52; and comparison of Japanese attitudes toward authority, 168; and comparison of moral reasoning of American and Japanese adults, 51–81; and comparison of moral scripts of Japanese and American university students, 29–49; comparative study of mother-child relationships in Japan and, 136, 139; and individualism-collectivism dichotomy, 32–4; and Japanese concept of apology, 18; and Japanese concept of self, 15–17; and social relativism in Japan, xiii universalism: Japan and cultural psychology, xi, xii–xiii; and Wierzbicka’s cultural script approach, 18
Uno, H., 258n1
urbanization, and impact of socioeconomic conditions on maternal role in Japan, 88, 103–5

Valsiner, J., xii
values: and comparison of moral reasoning of American and Japanese adults, 68, 74, 75n7; consensus-building and Japanese cultural, 199–200; and Kohlberg’s theory of moral development, 66, 70–1; Japanese preschool children and internalization of school’s, 167; and maternal role in Japan, 86–7, 109; relation of Japanese social to interpersonal behavior, 170–2. See also culture Vasudev, J., 52
videotapes: of group behavior in Japanese kindergarten, 175–6; of interactions of Japanese mothers and preschool children, 111, 114–15. See also methodology Vogel, E. F., 112, 113, 139, 149, 170, 172, 258
Vogel, S., 86, 114
Vygotsky, L. S., 206, 250
wagamama, and group behavior of Japanese preschool children, 144, 147, 156
Wakai, K., 87
Weinstein, H., 53, 112
Weisz, J. R., 31, 32
Wertsch, J. W., 206
White, G., xv, xvii
White, M. I., 113, 172, 228, 229, 230, 231, 249, 262, 264
Whiting, Beatrice B. and John W. M., xi–xii Wierzbicka, A., xvi, xvi, xvii, 17–21, 22–4, 220 women: and maternal role in Japan, 86; Meiji Era and role of in Japan, 258n1. See also gender; mothers Women of Suye, The (Smith and Wiswell, 1982), 87–8
Yamagishi, A., 31, 33–4, 37
Yamagishi, T., 33–4
Yoji to hoiku (Children and Childcare), 161
zurui, and personal experiences of Japanese adolescents, 209–11, 212–13