FATHERLANDS

State-building and Nationhood in Nineteenth-Century Germany

Fatherlands is an original study of the nature of identity in nineteenth-century Germany, which has crucial implications for the understanding of nationalism, German unification and the German nation state in the modern era.

The book approaches these questions from a new and important angle, that of the non-national territorial state. It explores the nature and impact of state-building in non-Prussian Germany. The issues covered range from railway construction and German industrialisation, to the modernisation of German monarchy, the emergence of a free press, the development of a modern educational system, and the role of monuments, museums and public festivities.

Fatherlands draws principally on extensive primary research focusing on the three kingdoms of Hanover, Saxony and Württemberg. It is an attempt to 'join up the dots' of German history – moving beyond isolated local, regional and state-based studies to a general understanding of the state formation process in Germany.

Acknowledgements

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the many people who have made this book possible.

First, I would like to thank the archives I used for their cooperation in this project: the Hauptstaatsarchiv (Stuttgart), the Niedersächsisches Hauptstaatsarchiv (Hanover) and the Sächsisches Hauptstaatsarchiv (Dresden). In particular I would like to thank HRH Ernst August, Prince of Hanover, for allowing me to use the royal archive. I would like to thank the staff of all three archives for their good advice, for their willingness to help wherever possible and for the time and trouble they devoted to my very numerous requests. My thanks are also due to the staff at the numerous libraries I have used: Cambridge University Library, the British Library, the German Historical Institute, and the Landesbibliotheken in Dresden, Hanover and Stuttgart.

Secondly, I would like to thank the various institutions which supported me financially during this project: the British Academy, the German Academic Exchange Service, Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, and the Kurt Hahn Foundation. Without their help this book would never have been written.

Thirdly, I would like to thank my Ph.D. supervisors, Tim Blanning and Jonathan Steinberg in Cambridge and Dieter Langewiesche in Tübingen, for their advice, support and encouragement, for their helpful comments on my work and for the many useful discussions we had. I am very grateful too, to the fellows of St John's College, Cambridge and Brasenose College, Oxford for providing such a supportive and friendly environment to live and work in. More generally, I would like to thank the wider community of German historians in Cambridge for providing such a stimulating working environment. Special thanks are due to Jo Whaley for the dedication with which he read my work, and for his help with many small things – both academic and practical – which went far beyond the call of duty. Likewise, I would like to thank Chris Clark for his unfailing helpfulness and for his ideas about my more recent work, which have proved invaluable in pointing me in the right direction. Many thanks are due, too, to Brendan Simms for his help with the ‘Tübingen connection’. I would also like to thank those who taught me at Oxford and have remained interested in my progress: Michael John, for his advice on things Hanoverian, and Niall Ferguson for his faith in me, and for his support and inspiration over the years.

Fourthly, I would like to thank the many others who have helped me with this project. Special thanks are due to Sibylle Mager for her help in editing the first draft of my manuscript, and to Emma Winter for her comments on the second draft. In particular, I would like to thank those whose hospitality and friendship made my time researching in Germany so enjoyable: Gabrielle, Danielle, Cedric and Martin in Stuttgart; Mathias, Andy and Dirk in Dresden; Phaula and Marita in Hanover, and last but not least Berit in Cologne. All these people put themselves out for me again and again as I dragged my suitcases around Germany.

On a more personal note, I feel that a special vote of thanks is due to Natasha, for supporting me through the final moments of my Ph.D., and to Morwena for writing to me so faithfully over the years. I am very grateful, too, to Boaz for listening so patiently to my thoughts on nineteenth-century Germany – a subject in which he has no interest whatsoever. Finally, I would like to thank my parents, for their love and support through my difficult years as an eternal student. This book is dedicated to them. With love.
