

Contents

General editor's preface	page xi
Preface	xiii
Note on websites	xvi

PART I SITUATIONS

1 The eclipse of the public	3
The historical roots of the eclipse	9
Pluralism and the common good today	17
Public opinion: thou shalt not judge	22
2 Problems tolerance cannot handle	32
Race, poverty, and social isolation in central cities	34
How big a world?	42
The need for shared goods	56

PART II FRAMEWORKS

3 Recovering the commonweal	65
From wariness to solidarity in freedom	67
Human relationships as valuable in themselves	79
4 Religion in public	87
Public religion, conflict, and peace	89
Religion strengthening public life	100
5 Christianity in a community of freedom	113
Reconsidering secularization	114
A theological argument	120

x	List of contents
6	Intellectual solidarity	137
	Deliberation, reciprocity, civility	138
	Christian distinctiveness and common morality	146
	Dialogic universalism	152
	Human rights: institutionalizing solidarity	159
	Politics, culture, and religion	165
PART III DIRECTIONS
7	Poverty, justice, and the good of the city	173
	The social isolation of the poor	174
	Interdependence and solidarity	181
	Justice: prerequisite for a good that is common	190
	The common good of a metropolitan community	200
8	The global common good	212
	The birthpangs of a transnational common good	213
	What kind of globalization? Normative considerations	220
	A network of crisscrossing communities	229
	Bibliography	245
	Electronic resources	260
	Index	263