ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This volume is the result of many discussions with colleagues working in the field of parliamentary history. All have, at one time or another, pointed out the reliance of historians on certain types of parliamentary documents to the exclusion of other important material. All have lamented how difficult it is to find anything in print which was not the diary of an MP, and why we should do more to highlight the wide range of parliamentary sources available to early modern historians. Therefore, this edition is designed to go some way towards addressing these lacunae. I wish to acknowledge not only the invaluable comments raised by my fellow contributors, but also the support and friendship of many who have worked in this field. In particular, Michael Graves who, as an exemplary Ph.D. supervisor, first encouraged me to look beyond traditional parliamentary sources, and did much to mould my attitude towards Parliament. Both David Dean and Pauline Croft have provided tremendous assistance over the years and have been more than generous in sharing their knowledge of early modern Parliaments. A hard-working but very pleasant summer of 1999 was spent in the company of Norman Jones at the Henry E. Huntington Library and his ideas on how to interrogate parliamentary sources have done much to shape my own opinions. Others whom I must mention are Tom Cogswell, Richard Cust, Stuart Handley, David Hayton, Paul Hunneyball, Sean Kelsey, Henry Lancaster, Patrick Little, Giles Margetts, John Morrill, David Smith, Andrew Thrush, and Marcy Norton for her help in translating from the Spanish. On a final note, this volume would not have made to the press by the deadline without the tremendous support and enthusiasm of the series editor, Andrew Pettegree, who from the outset wholeheartedly encouraged its production and contents. The completion of the manuscript would not have been possible without the unwavering support of Dympna Callaghan through many trans-Atlantic crossings and even more phone calls. Her intellectual gift is unparalleled and her brilliance, humour and warmth have immeasurably enhanced my life.

The editor and contributors would like to acknowledge warmly the following libraries and individuals for permission to publish the documents: the Bodleian Library, Oxford, British Library, Hampshire Record Office, His Grace the Duke of Buccleuch, His Grace the Duke of Rutland, House of Lords Record Office, Hull City Council, Public Record Office and Weymouth Museum.

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Simon Healy has written extensively on Yorkshire, the East Midlands and North Wales for the 1604–29 section of the History of Parliament, London. Forthcoming publications include essays on the young Oliver Cromwell, the Welsh cattle trade and parliamentary elections in early Stuart England, while in the longer term he plans to publish a critical edition of parliamentary debates on the Union project in 1604–7 and a study of relations between central and local government in early Stuart Yorkshire.

Chris R. Kyle is Visiting Assistant Professor at Syracuse University. Formerly a Senior Research Fellow at the History of Parliament, London, he is the author of a number of articles on early Stuart Parliaments and is co-editing, with Jason Peacey, Parliament at Work: Parliamentary Committees, Access and Lobbying Under the Tudors and Stuarts (forthcoming). He is currently writing a monograph entitled 'Politics and Society: The Toponomology of the Palace of Westminster in Sixteenth and Seventeenth Century England'.

Jason Peacey is a Research Fellow at the History of Parliament, London, and is the author of a number of articles on politics, patronage and print culture in the seventeenth century. He is currently editing a collection of essays on the trial of Charles I, and is preparing monographs on 'Politicians, Pamphleteers and Propaganda in the English Civil Wars', and on 'The Political Life of a Pamphleteer: William Prynne'.

Brennan Pursell received his Ph.D. at Harvard University in March 2000. He has published articles in The Sixteenth Century Journal and History and is currently working on his first book, 'The Winter King', a study of Elector Palatine Friedrich V.

David Scott is a Senior Research Fellow in the History of Parliament Trust, London. He has written several articles and essays on British politics in the 1640s and co-edited for the Royal Historical Society Camden Series The Journal of Thomas Juxon, 1644–1647.
