

Contents

List of Illustrations	page ix
Acknowledgments	xi
Introduction	1
1 Analogy and Category	9
The Celluloid Laocoön	11
Picturing Words/Wording Pictures	16
Categorizing Analogies/Analogizing Categories	26
2 Prose Pictures	31
Prose Painting/Illustration Commentary	31
Penning the Pencil: Prose Criticism of Illustrations	36
Prose at the Pictures	50
Pictured Prose: The Victorian Pictorial Initial	56
Penciling the Pen: The Pictorial Initials of Vanity Fair	57
Pictured Prose versus Prose Pictures	57
Dramatic Analogies: Character Character	59
Picture Symbols/Symbol Pictures	66
The Ends of the Spectrum	71
3 Film Language	77
Film Pictures as Language	77
Film Words as Literature	83
The Word in Silent Cinema	87
Titling Cinema: Silent Film Intertitle Criticism	87
Cinematizing Titles: Intertitles and Montage Theory	90
Book Illustration as Film	96
Textual Scenes of All Sorts	99
	vii

viii	Contents
4 Cinematic Novels/Literary Cinema	113
Exposing the Cinematic Victorian Novel	118
Cinematizing the Cinematic Novel and/or Literary Cinema	125
5 Literary Cinema and the Form/Content Debate	133
The Psychic Concept of Adaptation	136
The Ventriloquist Concept of Adaptation	143
The Genetic Concept of Adaptation	150
The De(Re)composing Concept of Adaptation	157
The Incarnational Concept of Adaptation	161
The Trumping Concept of Adaptation	173
Conclusion	181
6 Adaptation and Analogy	184
Adaptation and the Literalized Analogy	188
“You Know Very Well You’re Not Real”: Alice in Literaland	189
Adaptation and the Structural Analogy	194
“As Large as Life and Twice as Natural”: Alice in Verbal-to-Visualand	196
Adaptation and Psychoanalytic Analogy	205
“I Don’t Like Belonging to Another Person’s Dream”: Alice in Latentland	206
Adaptation and Looking Glass Analogies	209
From Word and Image to Figure and Image	215
“Why Is a Raven (Film) Like a Writing Desk (Novel)?”: Alice Through the Looking Glass	223
Live-Action Figures: Thomas Hardy’s Tess of the     D’Urbervilles (1897) and Roman Polanski’s Tess (1979)	233
Prefatory Conclusions/Concluding Prefaces	241
Notes	245
Works Cited	277
Index	295