

Contents

Acknowledgements	page vii
1 Introduction	I
The generation of shame	1
Theories of shame	6
Excess, superfluity and redundancy: redefining the function of prodigality in cultural reform	18
Registering change in the formal interests of texts	26
Ornamentality and literariness	32
Rereading Ovid in the 1590s	36
2 Generating waste: Thomas Nashe and the production of professional authorship	53
Waste paper	53
Redefining waste	60
The “out-landish Chronicler”	65
Esprit de corps	75
The most literary of literary forms: the paradoxical encomium	81
Restructuring reading in the generation of shame	86
Shame and the anxieties of the subject	92
Conclusion	97
3 Literature as fetish	102
The epyllion and the eroticization of Elizabethan literary culture	102
Shaping a sense of literary community	109
Rites of passage	116
The politics of the “Brothell Muse”	129
Sexual transgression and the mapping of aesthetic space	134
Effeminized authority	154
Blushing and the defense of publication	166
Conclusion	174

vi	Contents
4	Shame and the subject of history	178
	Recovering the particularities of England	178
	The problem of proper English style	184
	Plaining, counter-history and aesthetics	192
	Laureates of shame: defining public and private space	207
	Epistolary form and the interrogation of the poetics of shame	213
	Conclusion	222
	Epilogue	224
	Forms of the little and late Elizabethan culture	224
	Bibliography	234
	Index	254