

Cambridge University Press

0521842123 - China and the Great War: China's Pursuit of a New National Identity and Internationalization

Xu Guoqi

Table of Contents

More information

Contents

List of illustrations	page ix
Acknowledgments	xi
Note on romanization	xiv

Introduction	1
China's Great War: an unwritten chapter in world history	3
International history in the study of Chinese national identity	6
The Great War in Chinese history	9
The tragedy and paradoxes of the war in China and the world	11

Part I The stage is set

1 China's preparation for entry into the international system	19
The clash of two world orders	20
From China as Middle Kingdom to China as nation-state	25
National identity and reshaping Chinese memory	30
The rise of a new public	36
The 1911 Revolution and the sense of a new China	40
2 The rise of Chinese internationalism and the new diplomacy	49
Nationalism and the blossoming of Chinese public opinion	50
Nationalism as internationalism	57
China's foreign policy public	64
The advent of the new diplomacy	68
A new world order as ideal and reality: the coming of the Great War	74

Part II China attempts to join the war

3 Chinese responses to the outbreak of war	81
"Weiiji" and China's initial response	81
The Twenty-one Demands and their impact	93
The drive to attend the postwar peace conference	98
China again attempts to join the war	106

Cambridge University Press

0521842123 - China and the Great War: China's Pursuit of a New National Identity and Internationalization

Xu Guoqi

Table of Contents

More information

viii	Contents
4	“Using laborers as soldiers” – China’s alternative strategy	114
	The “laborers as soldiers” program	114
	The French mission	117
	The British mission	122
	The numbers issue	126
	A comparison of the French and British recruitment missions	131
	Competition and conflict among the Allies	137
	Laborers’ contributions to the war effort and to broader Chinese interests	140
5	China’s formal entry into the war	155
	The United States serves as a catalyst	156
	China’s war aims	164
	Betrayals on many fronts	174
	Conflicting Allied goals create deadlock	182
Part III The Great War in Chinese domestic politics and foreign relations
6	The war within	203
	The great debate of 1917	204
	Breakdown of the war policy consensus	212
	The rise of warlordism feeds political disintegration	222
	The Great Powers and Chinese politics	233
7	The 1919 Paris Peace Conference and China’s search for a new world order	244
	False dawn: Wilsonianism in China	244
	China tries to shape the new world order	252
	Chinese disappointments at Paris	258
	Significance of the conference for China	271
	Conclusion	278
	Appendix 1 Foreign-trained cabinet members in early Republican China	283
	Appendix 2 List of foreign ministers, 1912–1922	284
	Select bibliography	285
	Index	311