The Cambridge Introduction to Shakespeare's Tragedies

Macbeth clutches an imaginary dagger; Hamlet holds up Yorick's skull; Lear enters with Cordelia in his arms. Do these memorable and iconic moments have anything to tell us about the definition of Shakespearean tragedy? Is it in fact helpful to talk about 'Shakespearean tragedy' as a concept, or are there only Shakespearean tragedies? What kind of figure is the tragic hero? Is there always such a figure? What makes some plays more tragic than others? Beginning with a discussion of tragedy before Shakespeare and considering Shakespeare's tragedies chronologically one by one, this book seeks to investigate such questions in a way that highlights both the distinctiveness and the shared concerns of each play within the broad trajectory of Shakespeare's developing exploration of tragic form.

Janette Dillon is Professor of Drama at the School of English, University of Nottingham.

Quotations from Shakespeare's tragedies, except where otherwise indicated, are from the Arden third series where available, and the Arden second series otherwise. Quotations from Shakespeare's other plays are from The Riverside Shakespeare, gen. ed. G. Blakemore Evans, 2nd edn (Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1997). Since Shakespeare is almost always quoted in modern spelling, I have modernised the spelling of all contemporary quotations for consistency with this practice. The drawing attributed to Henry Peacham, possibly of Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus, page 27, is reproduced by permission of the Marquess of Bath.

I am indebted to Brean Hammond for reading the whole typescript in draft, and to the usual suspects for sharing conversations on Shakespearean tragedy. They know who they are. I am grateful too for the support of Sarah Stanton at Cambridge University Press.
