Aristotle's Ethics as First Philosophy

In Aristotle's Ethics as First Philosophy, Claudia Baracchi demonstrates the indissoluble links between practical and theoretical wisdom in Aristotle's thinking. Referring to a broad range of texts from the Aristotelian corpus, Baracchi shows how the theoretical is always informed by a set of practices and, specifically, how one's encounter with phenomena, the world, or nature in the broadest sense is always a matter of ethos. Such a "modern" intimation is shown to be found at the heart of Greek thought. Baracchi's book opens the way for a comprehensively reconfigured approach to classical Greek philosophy.

Claudia Baracchi is associate professor of philosophy at the New School for Social Research, New York. The author of Of Myth, Life, and War in Plato's Republic, she is the co-founder of the Ancient Philosophy Society.

Acknowledgments

I began writing this work during the academic year 2003/4. The project was generously supported by an American Council of the Learned Societies/Andrew W. Mellon Fellowship.

I wish to thank wholeheartedly my colleagues and students at the New School for Social Research for their trust, enthusiastic support, and tireless inspiration. In particular, I am grateful to Ben Grazzini, Fanny Söderbäck, and Chris Roberts for their careful assistance at various stages of the elaboration of the manuscript.

My gratitude goes also to Beatrice Rehl, at Cambridge University Press, for believing in this work from the start, and to Stephanie Sakson for her editorial contribution.

Dulcis in fundo, thanks to Michael Schober, for his fantastic friendship.
