

Contents

- List of illustrations* [page viii]
Preface [xiii]
- 1 The erotics of imperium [1]
    - Anecdotal history [1]
    - The main storyline [5]
    - The priapic paradigm [17]
    - One touch of Venus [27]
  - 2 Romancing the stone: the story of Hadrian and Antinous [52]
    - Approaching Antinous: the efficacy of the image [52]
    - The sculpture: ‘Schlagt die Augen nieder; hier ist Antinoos!’ [71]
    - Antinous and Roman religion: ‘This is the god of imperial Rome!’ [113]
  - 3 Compromising traditions: the case of Nero and Sporus [136]
    - ‘Greek love’ made Roman [136]
    - Prelude: making sense of Maximus [140]
    - Male–male desire as marriage [151]
    - Sporus and Poppaea [157]
  - 4 A match made in heaven: Earinus and the emperor [167]
    - Adopting an approach: the historicity of text and the textuality of history [167]
    - Springtime for Caesar: Martial’s epigrams about Earinus [175]
    - Cutting to the chase: the impact of Earinus in Statius’ Silvae 3.4 [182]
  - 5 Mistress as metaphor: a dialogue with Panthea [213]
    - ‘This was more than a woman: this was a masterpiece’ [213]
    - What’s in a name? Lucian’s Cyropaedia [218]
    - Fractured identities [223]
    - Locating Lucian [229]
    - Gluings things back together [233]
  - 6 And so to bed . . . [240]
- References* [243]
Index [272]
Index of principal passages [281]