

Archaeology, Ideology, and Urbanism in Rome from the Grand Tour to Berlusconi

Rome is one of the world's greatest archaeological sites, preserving many major monuments of the classical past. It is also a city with an important post-Roman history and home to both the papacy and the modern Italian state. Archaeologists have studied the ruins, and popes and politicians have used them for propaganda programs. Developers and preservationists have fought over what should and should not be preserved. This book tells the story of those complex, interacting developments over the past three centuries, from the days of the Grand Tour through the arrival of the fascists, which saw more destruction but also an unprecedented use of the remains for political propaganda. In postwar Rome urban development predominated over archaeological preservation and much was lost. However, starting in the 1970s, preservationists have fought back, saving much and making the city into Europe's most important case study in historical preservation and historical loss.

STEPHEN L. DYSON is Park Professor of Classics at the University at Buffalo and SUNY Distinguished Professor. His research interests focus on the history of the city of Rome and the archaeology of Roman Italy and its empire. He is former president of the Classical Association of the American Academy in Rome and past president of the Archaeological Institute of America, and has written a number of titles including Rome: A Living Portrait of an Ancient City (2010).

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-87459-5 — Archaeology, Ideology, and Urbanism in Rome from the Grand Tour to Berlusconi

Stephen L. Dyson

Frontmatter

More Information

---

Archaeology, Ideology, and Urbanism in Rome from the Grand Tour to Berlusconi

---

STEPHEN L. DYSON

State University of New York, Buffalo

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-87459-5 — Archaeology, Ideology, and Urbanism in Rome from the Grand Tour to Berlusconi

Stephen L. Dyson

Frontmatter

More Information

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

University Printing House, Cambridge CB2 8BS, United Kingdom

One Liberty Plaza, 20th Floor, New York, NY 10006, USA

477 Williamstown Road, Port Melbourne, VIC 3207, Australia

314–321, 3rd Floor, Plot 3, Splendor Forum, Jasola District Centre,
New Delhi – 110025, India

79 Anson Road, #06–04/06, Singapore 079906

Cambridge University Press is part of the University of Cambridge.

It furthers the University's mission by disseminating knowledge in the pursuit of education, learning, and research at the highest international levels of excellence.

www.cambridge.org

Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9780521874595

DOI: 10.1017/9781139029759

© Stephen L. Dyson 2019

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press.

First published 2019

Printed in the United Kingdom by TJ International Ltd, Padstow Cornwall

A catalogue record for this publication is available from the British Library.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Names: Dyson, Stephen L., author.

Title: Archaeology, ideology and urbanism in Rome from the grand tour to Berlusconi / Stephen L. Dyson.

Description: Cambridge, United Kingdom ; New York, NY : Cambridge University Press, 2019. | Includes bibliographical references.

Identifiers: LCCN 2018027192 | ISBN 9780521874595

Subjects: LCSH: Rome (Italy) – Antiquities. | Archaeology – Social aspects – Italy – Rome.

Classification: LCC DG63 .D97 2019 | DDC 945.6/32–dc23

LC record available at <https://lccn.loc.gov/2018027192>

ISBN 978-0-521-87459-5 Hardback

Cambridge University Press has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party internet websites referred to in this publication and does not guarantee that any content on such websites is, or will remain, accurate or appropriate.

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-87459-5 — Archaeology, Ideology, and Urbanism in Rome from the Grand Tour to Berlusconi

Stephen L. Dyson

Frontmatter

More Information

---

To those who have fought long and hard to save the heritage of Rome

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-87459-5 — Archaeology, Ideology, and Urbanism in Rome from the Grand Tour to Berlusconi

Stephen L. Dyson

Frontmatter

More Information

---

Contents

List of Figures [page viii]

Preface [xiii]

Introduction [1]

1 Rome in the Eighteenth Century [8]

2 French Intervention and Papal Reaction [33]

3 Archaeology and Urbanism in the Waning Decades of Papal Rome [57]

4 Archaeology and Urbanism in Rome during the Early Decades of the National State [81]

5 Development and Challenge to Archaeology in Roma Capitale [101]

6 Museums, Markets, and Displays in the New Rome [129]

7 Archaeology and Urbanism in Fascist Rome [154]

8 Mostras and Museums in Fascist Rome [180]

9 Quietism, Conformity, and Chaos: Urbanism and Archaeology in the 1950s and 1960s [203]

10 A New Generation, a New Politics, and a New Archaeology [236]

11 The Apex and End of an Era: The Giubileo, the Ara Pacis, and the Twilight of the Heirs of Bianchi Bandinelli [259]

Afterword [287]

Bibliography [294]

Index [318]

Figures

- 1 Bénigne Gagneraux, Meeting of Gustavus Adolphus III of Sweden with Pope Pius VI in the Vatican Galleries, Bildarkivet, Nationalmuseum Stockholm. Reproduced with permission. [page 9]
- 2 Katherine Reid, British Gentlemen in Rome c. 1750, Paul Mellon Collection B1981.25.27. Courtesy of the Yale Center for British Art. [17]
- 3 Giovanni Antonio Canaletto, Rome: The Ruins of the Forum Looking toward the Capitol, 1743, Courtesy of the Royal Collection Trust / © Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II 2016 [18]
- 4 Thomas Cole, View of the Protestant Burying-ground in Rome, 1832–34, Olana Museum Collection, Olana State Historic Site, Hudson, NY, New York State Office of Parks, Recreation, and Historic Preservation. [19]
- 5 The Sculpture Studio of Bartolomeo Cavaceppi, 1769. Courtesy of Nancy de Grummond. [22]
- 6 Giovanni Battista Nolli, The Nolli Plan of Rome. Photograph after T. Kirk, The Architecture of Modern Italy, 2005, p. 21. Reproduced with the permission of Marcello Barbanera. [25]
- 7 Joseph-Charles Marin and Jean Jérôme Baugean, Departure of Antiquities for Paris under Terms of Treaty of Tolentino (engraving). Photograph after F. Haskell & N. Penny, Taste and the Antique, 1981. Reproduced with the permission of the publisher. [34]
- 8 Artist unknown, The Battle of the Antiquarians of Rome, 1813 (Fiorentissimo combattimento fra gli antiquari di Roma nell'anno 1813). Photograph after R. T. Ridley, The Eagle and the Spade, 1992, p. 231: Plate 78. Reproduced with the permission of the author. [39]
- 9 The proposed Napoleonic Palace in Rome. Photograph after T. Kirk, The Architecture of Modern Italy, 2005, p. 21. Reproduced with the permission of Marcello Barbanera. [43]

- 10 A view of the excavated area around the Column of Trajan from Carlo Fea, Nuova descrizione di Roma antica e moderna, 1.406, c. 1820. Photograph after R. T. Ridley, The Eagle and the Spade, 1992. Reproduced with the permission of the author. [44]
- 11 The Temple (of Vespasian) before Excavation by Bartolomeo Pinelli. Image from R. T. Ridley, The Eagle and the Spade, Cambridge University Press 1992, p. 200. Reproduced with the permission of the author. [45]
- 12 Luigi Rossi, View of the Temple of Vesta in Rome, 1817, etching. Image from R. T. Ridley, The Eagle and the Spade, 1992, p. 215. Reproduced with the permission of the author. [46]
- 13 The Arch of Titus, as restored in the early nineteenth century. Image by the author. [53]
- 14 Convict laborers at work in the Roman Forum. Photograph after D. Manacorda and R. Ramassia, Il piccone del regime, 1985, p.110. Reproduced with the permission of the authors. [55]
- 15 The Casa Tarpeia, Headquarters of the German Archaeological Institute on the Campidoglio. Courtesy of The German Archaeological Institute (DAI). Rome Photo Archive. [63]
- 16 The first railway station at Rome. Photograph after T. Kirk, The Architecture of Modern Italy, 2005, p. 221, fig. 4.20. Reproduced with the permission of Marcello Barbanera. [70]
- 17 View of Rome, c. 1870. Photograph after D. Manacorda and R. Tamassia, Il piccone del regime, 1985, p. 98. Reproduced with the permission of the authors. [90]
- 18 Pantheon draped for the Funeral of Victor Emmanuel III, 1878. Reproduced with the permission of Marcello Barbanera. [102]
- 19 Il Palazzo di Giustizia. Image by the author. [106]
- 20 Il Palazzo delle Esposizioni. Image by the author. [107]
- 21 G. D. Falda, The Gardens of the Villa Ludovisi. Photograph after F. Haskell & N. Penny, Taste and the Antique, 1981. Reproduced with the permission of the publisher. [112]
- 22 The Helbig family and guests at the Villa Lante. Photograph. Courtesy of The German Archaeological Institute (DAI). Rome Photo Archive. [140]
- 23 View of the Forum Boarium with the restored church of Santa Maria in Cosmedin. Image by the author. [146]
- 24 The façade of the British School at Rome, c. 1911. Photograph courtesy of the British School at Rome. [150]

- 25 Archaeological Exhibition in the Baths of Diocletian, 1911. Photograph after M. Barbanera, “The Impossible Museum: Exhibitions of Archaeology as Reflection of Contemporary Archaeologies,” in N. Schlanger and J. Nordbladh, eds., Archives, Ancestors, Practices, 2008, p. 172, fig. 13.5. [151]
- 26 Mussolini visits the excavations at the Theater of Marcellus. Photograph after D. Manacorda and R. Tamassia, Il piccone del regime, 1985, p. 47. Reproduced with the permission of the authors. [165]
- 27 Albert Bierstadt, The Portico of Octavia, 1855. Courtesy of the Fine Arts Museum of San Francisco. [166]
- 28 Map of the area of the Imperial Fora in the later nineteenth century. Loescher Guides: Itinéraire de Rome et de ses environs, 1877. [169]
- 29 Fascist parade down the newly opened Via dell’Impero. Photograph after D. Manacorda and R. Tamassia, Il piccone del regime, 1985, p. 40. Reproduced with the permission of the authors. [172]
- 30 Air view of the Tomb of Augustus after the Fascist Restoration. Photograph after D. Manacorda and R. Tamassia, Il piccone del regime, 1985, p. 200. Reproduced with the permission of the authors. [176]
- 31 The Fascist Museum of the Ara Pacis. Architect Vittorio Ballio Morpurgo. Image by the author. [178]
- 32 The Façade of the Mostra Augustea. Photograph after D. Manacorda and R. Tamassia, Il piccone del regime, 1985, p. 40. Reproduced with the permission of the authors. [184]
- 33 The plaster model of Ancient Rome prepared for the Mostra Augustea. Image by the author. [186]
- 34 The EUR Palazzo della Civiltà. Image by the author. [191]
- 35 Exhibit on Rome and Early Christianity, Museo della Civiltà Romana. Image by the author. [212]
- 36 The post-World War II railway station at Rome. Image by the author. [215]
- 37 Antonio Cederna on the Via Appia. Photograph courtesy of L’Archivio Antonio Cederna, Soprintendenza Archeologica di Roma, Via Appia Antica, Rome. [229]
- 38 Adriano La Regina. Image by the author. [242]
- 39 The archaeological monuments in the Roman Forum under restoration. Image by the author. [244]

- 40 Overview of the excavations at the Crypta Balbi. Photograph after Daniele Manacorda, Crypta Balbi: Archeologia e storia di un paesaggio urbano, 2001. Reproduced with permission of the author. [248]
- 41 The Augustus Labicanus in the Palazzo Massimo Museum. Photograph courtesy of Celestine Dagli / Alamy Stock Photo. [262]
- 42 The interior of the Montemartini Museum. Image by the author. [266]
- 43 Overview of urban sprawl at Rome in direction of Villa of Maxentius. Image by the author. [277]
- 44 View of the Roman aqueducts in the late nineteenth century. Photograph courtesy of the British School at Rome. [278]
- 45 The Richard Meier Ara Pacis Museum. Image by the author. [285]

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-87459-5 — Archaeology, Ideology, and Urbanism in Rome from the Grand Tour to Berlusconi

Stephen L. Dyson

Frontmatter

More Information

---

Preface

I first visited Rome in 1959. It was the drab but exciting postwar city now well known from the novels and cinema of the era. I continued to return over the decades. As a student-scholar of Roman archaeology, I appreciated the many new discoveries. I was also frustrated by the degradation of the archaeological sites and museums. Wider, generally negative changes in the urban physical, social, and economic fabric largely escaped the attention of those of us who mostly operated in the comfortable orbits of the foreign schools.

A growing interest in the history of classical archaeology led me into the socio-economic as well as the technical history of Italian classical archaeology. The writings of scholars like Ranuccio Bianchi Bandinelli provided a sophisticated new approach. Marxist perspectives were not readily found in American classical archaeological scholarship. Meanwhile, in Italy re-evaluations of fascist archaeology from both ideological and methodological perspectives led to new investigations of pre-fascist Italian archaeology. With that came a new appreciation of the contributions of archaeological scholars like Giacomo Boni. While those historical reconstructions and the complex, multi-directional discussions which grew out of them were well known in Italian archaeological circles, they had limited visibility, especially in anglophone scholarship. It again seemed a story worth telling.

Meanwhile, another, new archaeological narrative was developing. The deterioration of the sites, monuments, and museums in Rome continued unchecked from the end of World War II. By the late 1970s degeneration had reached the point where the very physical integrity of monuments like the Column of Marcus Aurelius was threatened. At that key moment a new generation of archaeologists, newly coming into positions of power, sounded the alarm. Gradually the public and politicians listened. A massive influx of financial resources led to a golden age of excavation, site restoration, museum development, and publications aimed at scholars and the general public.

This book seeks to place these developments in the wider context of the evolution of Rome as an “archaeological” city. It begins with the early eighteenth century, when cultural promotion based on the presentation of the antiquities replaced doctrinal propaganda as a major instrument of papal policy. It continues with a consideration of the roles played by the popes and their advisors in creating Rome's first heritage policy.

The unification of Italy and the creation of Rome as the national capital provided new challenges for Rome's archaeological heritage. On the one hand, uncontrolled growth led to the massive destruction of ancient remains. On the other hand, the new national government needed the vision of ancient Rome provided by archaeology to counter the omnipresent reminders of the importance of the long history of papal, Christian Rome. The years from 1870 to 1922 proved to be among the most important for the creation of a modern archaeology in Rome.

Mussolini's seizure of power in 1922 initiated a new era in archaeology in the city, one largely based on the cult of ancient Romanità. There was an ironic contrast between the promotion of Roman archaeology in excavations, museums, and temporary exhibitions, and the destruction of so much archaeology as a result of Mussolini's grandiose plans of urban revitalization. The torpor and neglect that followed the end of fascism was a not unexpected outcome.

It would have been satisfying to end this study with the accomplishments of the new generation that emerged in the late 1970s and 1980s. However, history, especially in Italy, is never static. The political compass has kept shifting, as have the views about the role of archaeology in twentieth- and twenty-first-century Rome. This study ends with deliberate ambiguity, as the future of Rome's archaeological resources is very uncertain.

This book has been long in the making. The final product owes much to a variety of institutions and individuals. Much of the basic research was conducted at the library of the American Academy in Rome and through the various library services of the University at Buffalo. The Office of the Dean of Arts and Sciences at the University at Buffalo provided key research funding. The text owes much to discussion with colleagues in Europe and America and to interaction with my graduate students in various seminars.

Special thanks are owed to those who played key roles in turning manuscript into book. Alexander Masurek of the University at Buffalo Classics Graduate Program served multiple roles from bibliographer to editor. Michael Sharp brought the manuscript through the acceptance process and provided very useful initial editorial advice. Lisa Sinclair moved it into the initial stages of the editorial process. For the final editing I owe special thanks to Jacqueline French, who with patience and good humor turned a rather disordered manuscript into a product ready to be presented to the press and the public. My family and my wife Pauline are owed special thanks for their support over the years.

The dedication has been left intentionally general. To highlight some figures would lead me to neglect others who were equally deserving. Often the most successful ventures in archaeological research and conservation have been complex undertakings with credit due to technicians and trench supervisors as well as the directors and organizers. Rome's rich archaeological heritage has obviously suffered from neglect and willful atrocity. However, from the eighteenth century down to the present, it has been well served by the research and advocacy of dedicated savants, public servants, and scholars. May the tradition continue.

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-87459-5 — Archaeology, Ideology, and Urbanism in Rome from the Grand Tour to Berlusconi

Stephen L. Dyson

Frontmatter

More Information

---